

PLO: Israeli plan a farce

NICOSIA (AP) — The Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) said Monday that the peace plan approved a day earlier by the Israeli cabinet was a "farce" that ignored their right to a independent homeland. The committee said the plan was also flawed because it did not include Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories, and ignored the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people. "The committee sees that this proposal does not concern Palestinian people, because it fails to recognise their existence as a nation," said a statement issued by the 15-member committee after a meeting at their headquarters in Tunis. The statement said the plan did not take into account all the international resolutions, including United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

Sharif Zaid receives demands from Maan, pledges efforts

AMMAN (Petra) — A delegation representing the citizens of Maan led by Mayor Mousa Khalaf Fayyad Monday presented to the government a set of demands for improved health, education and social services. The demands, as presented to Prime Minister Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker at a meeting, also call on the government to help find employment for Maan citizens in economic projects set up around the city.

considered Maan as its main base in Jordan and a city which welcomed the vanguards of the revolt led by the late King Abdullah Ibn Al Hussein, founder of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan," he said.

Sharif Zaid pointed out that the country was now going through a difficult financial and economic stage, and solidarity and close cooperation on the part of all citizens were needed to overcome the present situation. Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Ibrahim Izzidine was present at the meeting held at the Prime Ministry.

Premier reaffirms Jordan's stand in talks with Ross

By Rania Atalla with agency dispatches

AMMAN — Prime Minister Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker Monday met with a visiting U.S. State Department delegation, headed by Director of Policy Planning Dennis Ross, and was briefed on the results of talks last week between U.S. Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, focusing on the Middle East situation which figured high on the agenda on regional conflicts in the Mideast meeting.

Attending the meeting were Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Marwan Al Qasem and Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Ibrahim Izzidine in addition to the U.S. ambassador to Amman. Qasem had also met with the delegation Monday and exchanged views on the latest developments in the region. Qasem reiterated the importance of intensifying efforts, in the context of a peace process, for convening an international peace conference with the participation of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council and all parties involved in the conflict, including the PLO.

Ross, who arrived from Egypt, said in Cairo the Israeli plan for elections in the occupied territories needed to be developed further. "I think it has elements that can be built up. We need to know more about it," Ross said in reference to the plan originally put forth by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and approved by the Israeli cabinet Sunday (see page 4).

Army destroys 13 Palestinian homes

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (Agencies) — The Israeli army destroyed or sealed 13 homes in the occupied West Bank Monday in a crackdown on suspected Palestinian activities involved in the 17-month-old uprising. The demolitions were carried out as Palestinians staged a general strike to mark the 41st anniversary of the founding of the Zionist state, what underground uprising leaders called "the disaster when Israel was created."

but the bullets struck a local woman who died of her wounds. The Deir Nidham man allegedly stabbed and injured a border policeman in February. Western nations, including the United States, have condemned house demolitions and sealings as a violation of the right to due process because it usually comes before suspects have been tried. Since the December 1987 start of the uprising, more than 170 houses have been demolished and more than 70 others sealed in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to army figures.

In the occupied lands, Palestinians observed a general strike to protest the displacement of more than 600,000 Palestinians after the founding of Israel on May 15, 1948. Underground leaders of the uprising called the event the "Palestinian catastrophe" in a leaflet ordering the strike. Israel celebrated its founding last Wednesday, marking the event by the Jewish calendar. In the West Bank village of Beit, residents stoned seven settlers who were on a hiking tour of the area, the army said. The settlers fled to a nearby hill and repeatedly fired in the air before being rescued by soldiers. There were no reports of injuries.

SWAPO confined to camps

LUANDA (R) — A senior U.N. official confirmed Monday that Namibian nationalist fighters have pulled back into Angola and been confined to camps there. Major John Ryan of the U.N. Transition Assistance Group for Namibia (UNTAG) told Reuters in Luanda that 5,166 fighters of the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) paraded at the weekend at Chibemba in southern Angola, where they were counted by U.N. officials.

South Africa, Angola and Cuba and Soviet and U.S. observers were meeting on the frontier to decide if all SWAPO fighters had quit Namibia. If they agree, Pretoria is expected to resume its own withdrawal under a U.N. independence plan which was thrown off course on the day it was due to start, April 1. A SWAPO incursion led to fighting with South African-led forces and more than 300 guerrillas died. Hamutenya said of Pretoria's troops: "We want them to go back to their bases and then leave. Whether they will or not is something else. They can always find excuses."

Hamutenya said the guerrillas were confined to bases above the 16th Parallel in Angola, 150 kilometres north of the Namibian border, as agreed last month. Chibemba, where the SWAPO parade took place, is 30 kilometres north of the 16th Parallel. The parade was inspected by Colonel Michael Moriarty who heads the UNTAG team in Angola. SWAPO President Sam Nujoma and Angolan and SWAPO military commanders were there. "We confirm SWAPO fighters now effectively confined to camps north of 16th Parallel," Moriarty said in a telex message to the U.N. special representative in Namibia, Martti Ahtisaari.

U.S. envoy leaves Panama

PANAMA CITY (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis left in protest for home Monday in the aftermath of presidential elections which observers called fraudulent and the Panamanian government annulled. Meanwhile, hospital officials said Monday the condition of Guillermo Endara, the leading opposition candidate beaten in the tumultuous aftermath of the May 7 voting, had improved, and he might be released Tuesday. Also Monday, schools reopened for children of American military personnel in the Panama Canal zone. But work was suspended for local teachers preparing for the opening of the Panamanian school year. U.S. President George Bush announced last week that Davis would be withdrawn indefinitely to document Washington's anger at the beatings of some political candidates by thugs associated with the government. Davis said before departing that Manuel Antonio Noriega — Panama's de-facto ruler who faces U.S. drug charges — ordered last week's attack on opposition candidates in an attempt to assassinate one of them.

Sultan Qaboos arrives today

By Rania Atalla with agency dispatches

AMMAN — Sultan Qaboos Ibn Sa'id of Oman arrives in Amman Tuesday on a state visit and for talks with His Majesty King Hussein on Arab and regional issues as well as bilateral relations and for consultations ahead of the extraordinary Arab summit scheduled to be held in Casablanca May 23-24.

Muharak meanwhile thanked Syrian President Hafez Al Assad for supporting Egypt's attendance at the Casablanca summit. In a statement carried by Cairo's Middle East News Agency (MENA), Mubarak said: "There are no differences between Syria and Egypt."

Sultan Qaboos' talks with King Hussein are expected to focus on the latest developments at the Arab and international scenes, the situation in Lebanon and efforts for peace in the Middle East. Qaboos' visit to Jordan comes as part of a scheduled tour of Arab and European countries which started with Kuwait and is expected to take him to Egypt, France, Spain and Britain. The trip is Qaboos' first outside the Arab World since his visit to the U.S. in 1983.

Official sources in Oman were quoted by the AP as saying Sultan Qaboos will discuss the Gulf situation and Arab and international issues during his tour. The Omani leader's visit to Jordan comes amid intensified inter-Arab contacts ahead of the Casablanca summit, which is expected to discuss the new Palestinian peace strategy and the Lebanese civil strife as well as Egypt's reentry into the Arab League. The emir of Bahrain, Sheikh Isa Ibn Khalifa, held talks on the summit with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein in Baghdad Sunday and is expected in Cairo for discussions with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Prime Minister, Saudi air chief discuss cooperation, relations

AMMAN (J.T.) — Prime Minister Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker Monday received Saudi Air Defence Commander Prince Khaled Ibn Sultan Ibn Abdul Aziz in the presence of His Royal Highness Prince Faisal Ibn Al Hussein. Discussions during the meeting covered means to develop cooperation and relations between the two countries in various fields in accordance with the directives of His Majesty King Hussein and Saudi King Fahd Ibn Abdul Aziz. The prime minister hosted a luncheon in honour of the guest. Present were Prince Faisal, Chief of Staff General Fathi Abu Taleb, the chief of the General Intelligence Department, the commander of the Royal Jordanian Air Force, senior military officials, and members of the delegation accompanying Prince Khaled.

Earlier, Abu Taleb received in his office the Saudi guest and the accompanying delegation and reviewed the current situation in the region as well as spheres of cooperation. Journalists' problems ordered resolved

AMMAN (J.T.) — Prime Minister Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker has issued directives to the Ministry of Information to settle all problems related to journalists who had stopped writing, the Jordan News Agency, Petra said. Reporting on a meeting between the prime minister and a number of journalists, Petra said the move was taken with a view to "enable the journalists to practise their journalistic activities and effectively participate in serving their country and society through their work."

Hopes for Lebanon hang on Arab summit

KUWAIT (R) — Deployment of Arab League ceasefire observers in Lebanon appeared little closer Monday and diplomats said hopes of lasting peace rested on next week's Arab summit. "The last ditch, last chance is the summit," one said. "If they (Lebanon's warring parties) can't come to some meeting of minds it is hard to see what can be done after that."

Assistant Secretary General Lakhdar Brahimi, arrived in Kuwait Sunday night to brief Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmad Al Sabah after a week of shuttle diplomacy between Beirut and Damascus. A Foreign Ministry official told reporters the negotiators, due to return to Beirut within hours, had won agreement from all parties on a ceasefire and had received promises of cooperation. Brahimi said on arrival in Kuwait that all Lebanese parties had made it clear they accepted the ceasefire and there were no problems concerning when and where the observer force would deploy.

But diplomats said the observer force of about 300 men could not move in at present. "At the moment they are deadlocked," said one Western diplomat. "The observers cannot be deployed because the ceasefire is not effective." A truce negotiated by Brahimi has generally held since Thursday, easing eight weeks of artillery battles between troops loyal to military commander Michel Aoun, Syrian troops and Lebanese militia allies. But gunners have continued firing on Aoun-controlled ports. Sheikh Sabah, head of an Arab League ministerial committee trying to mediate a lasting solution in Lebanon, has said the force will not deploy until all firing stops. Rival forces say the observers should patrol the coast to stop Aoun bringing in arms. Syrian Vice-President Abdul Halim Khaddam in an interview published Monday said his country could not be defeated in Lebanon. "No one can inflict defeat on Syria in Lebanon," he told the London-based Arabic language newspaper Al Sharq Awsat. "Relations between the Syrians and Lebanese are stronger than those between the inhabitants of the (U.S.) states of California and New York," Khaddam said. "It was the Lebanese government which had invited Syria to come to Lebanon in 1976," Khaddam added. Khaddam said Syria's presence in the neighbouring country was prompted by the need to "preserve the security of both Syria and Lebanon." "Even the (unwritten) 1943 Lebanese national charter bans the use of Lebanese territory in attack Syria, Syrian and Israeli forces fought each other during Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982, and the Israelis were 25 kilometres from Damascus."

Massive student rally for democracy mars Peking summit

Gorbachev declares end to Sino-Soviet split

PEKING (Agencies) — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, on the first day of a historic visit disrupted by student demonstrations, declared Monday an end to the Sino-Soviet split and said the Kremlin had been partly at fault for the three decades of a bad feeling. "Very probably we are also responsible for that period to a certain extent," Gorbachev told China's President Yang Shangkun. The Soviet leader, in remarks broadcast on Chinese Television, expressed "sorrow and regret" for the bad blood of the past, and said, "this period has come to an end."

Yang, in turn, described relations between the two communist nations as having come to "a new starting point." Gorbachev, 58, arrived earlier Monday for the first Sino-Soviet summit since Nikita Khrushchev met Mao Tse-Tung in 1959 in acrimonious talks that contributed to rapidly deteriorating relations. The two nations nearly went to war after border fighting broke out in 1969. They have since been at odds over Afghanistan, Cambodia and what China has called Soviet "hegemonism."

Both sides agree that Gorbachev's meeting Tuesday with 84-year-old senior leader Deng Xiaoping will normalise government and Communist Party ties and help spur economic, cultural and academic contacts. But the summit got off to a rocky start as up to 150,000 people, about half of them students, occupied Tiananmen Square in a massive protest for a more open and democratic society. The protesters tried to march up the steps of Peking's Great Hall of the People while Gorbachev banqueted with Chinese leaders inside. Reuter reporters on the scene saw police reinforcements running to the east side of the vast hall to prevent the students from forcing their way in. Police pushed back the students — who had demonstrated overnight in defiance of the authorities in nearby Tiananmen Square — but reporters did not see any serious clashes. Tens of thousands of people thronged the square, including 2,000 students on the third day of a hunger strike. Student leaders appealed for calm with loudhailers. "We want Gorbachev," workers at the southern end of the hall chanted in English. Several thousand police and troops, some sitting calmly on the paving stones, kept them back. Gorbachev praised Peking's reforms in his banquet speech. "The Soviet people applaud and understand the enthusiasm

Yang spoke of a "new starting point" in ties with the Soviet Union but, in veiled words of warning, mentioned China's consistent opposition to "hegemonism," a code-word used in the past by China to described attempted superpower domination. Yang recalled he studied for three years in the Soviet Union and extended China's warm welcome to the Soviet leader.

Earlier traffic was paralysed along the capital's thoroughfare as leading Chinese intellectuals marched towards the square, drawing crowds numbering thousands. Hundreds of Peking citizens staged their own protest nearby, rallying under a banner proclaiming "the Chinese people are entirely with the students."

PLO describes Israeli proposal as ridiculous

TUNIS (Agencies) — A Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) official Monday described the Israeli government's election proposals as ridiculous and said they appeared to fall far short of elections envisaged by the PLO.

Jamil Hilal, director of the PLO Information Department in Tunis, told Reuters: "It's quite clear that the PLO can't take the proposal seriously in any way... it's a ridiculous proposal."

The Israeli plan, endorsed at a cabinet meeting Sunday, offers the Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip the chance to elect representatives to negotiate with Israel.

The representatives would also serve as a self-governing authority during a five-year interim period while they negotiated a permanent solution.

But the plan, essentially a revival of the 1978 Camp David accord between Israel and Egypt, rules the PLO out of talks and does not guarantee Israeli withdrawal at any stage.

Hilal repeated the PLO position that it could only endorse elections if they formed part of a comprehensive scheme leading to the independence of the occupied territories.

"There should also be Israeli withdrawal and international supervision of the elections... we are more convinced than ever that this position is correct," he added.

The PLO spokesman, Ahmad Abdul Rahman, said he could not comment on the Israeli proposals until the Palestinian leadership had seen the details and discussed them.

In Baghdad, Iraq, the Palestinian ambassador, Azzam Al Ahmad, said the plan put forward by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir is still vague on the "final goal" of any elections in the occupied territories. The goal should be an independent Palestinian state, he said. "We will reject any attempt to go back to the autonomy rule plan suggested by the Camp David accords," he said.

In Damascus, a spokesman for the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP) said the group does not care about a cabinet vote "of who is against the Shamir plan and who is against it."

The DFLP, the second-largest group in the PLO, issued a statement saying the plan was a "false enterprise" aimed at undermining the Palestinian uprising and plans for an international conference on Middle East peace.

Elections before an Israeli withdrawal and without international supervision would be rejected, the statement said.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) also issued a similar statement in Damascus, calling for a complete Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories before elections could be contemplated.

The DFLP also called Monday for the stepping up of the uprising and urged Arab states to back the revolt effectively.

The DFLP was commenting on the 41st anniversary of the termination of British mandate on Palestine and the founding of the state of Israel.

In a statement received in Nicosia, the DFLP said the uprising "has crowned a new phase of Palestinian national struggle aimed at achieving full independence."

It said "the achievements made so far should be developed to spur Western Europe to recognise officially the state of Palestine and exert pressure on the United States to agree to convening an international conference (to solve the Palestinian problem)."

"The Arab countries for their part should effectively back the uprising... while our people in occupied territories are called upon to step up the struggle and direct more painful blows to the occupation authorities."

Israeli moves

Meanwhile, Israeli officials prepared to solicit Arabs Monday to join in negotiations under the election plan: despite its initial rejection by leading Palestinians.

"It's first time the Likud and Labour have been able to unite behind one plan," Shamir spokesman Avi Pazner said.

The unanimity of the normally fractious government seemed to result mainly from the fact the plan sidestepped controversial elements such as Palestinian supervision and the participation of 140,000 Palestinians in Arab Jerusalem.

Pazner said the key question now was whether an Arab partner could be found for negotiations. He said that would be the focus of U.S. State Department envoy Dennis Ross' forthcoming trip to Egypt and Jordan.

Pazner said Ross would report back to Shamir on Palestinian and Arab reaction Tuesday.

Shamir picked up qualified support from Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, who predicted elections would be held within a year.

Freij said on Israel's Arabic TV that Shamir's plan is a "worthy idea if it is fairly conducted under international supervision with the consent of the PLO and the participation of the residents of East Jerusalem."

Under the plan, the occupied territories would be divided into 10 voting districts, each represented by one person in the elected body, Israel Radio reported.

The plan specifically rules out negotiations with the PLO and says Israel will oppose creation of a Palestinian state.

Iran haj boycott looks certain as Saudi ties sour

NICOSIA (R) — An Iranian boycott of the annual pilgrimage to holy places looks certain after Tehran unleashed a fresh blast of invective against Saudi Arabia ending a propaganda truce.

On the second day of a new anti-Saudi campaign, the Tehran newspaper Jomhuri Eslami accused the ruling house of Saud of scotching at the last moment an agreement on Iranian participation in this year's pilgrimage clinched through Muslim countries like Pakistan.

On Sunday Tehran accused Riyadh of being "un-Islamic." Gulf-based Iranian sources said indirect talks on averting a boycott had broken down over Iran's demand to send 150,000 pilgrims, more than three times as many as Saudi Arabia will accept.

A Saudi Arabian official said Iran's intentions would become clear by Tuesday, when it will be known if it will attend a conference on the Haj in Saudi Arabia the next day.

If it does not attend then a boycott of the Haj itself next July for the second year in a row will be on the cards, he said.

Diplomats in the region said, however, that a boycott already looked certain.

Iran's official Haj and Endowment Organisation said Sunday that imposing a quota on the number of pilgrims and a Saudi Arabia ban on political demonstrations were "un-Islamic."

The criticisms end a truce in a war of words between Iran and Saudi Arabia that began in October when the two countries sought to improve ties following last August's Gulf war ceasefire.

Riyadh broke diplomatic ties with Tehran in April last year, accusing it of terrorism and subversive acts as the two countries clashed over the Haj. Ties have not been restored.

More than 400 people, most of them Iranian pilgrims, were killed after Saudi security forces intervened to stop political demonstration in Mecca in July 1987.

Iran stayed away from the pilgrimage in 1988 after Saudi Arabia refused to accept more than 45,000 Iranians or agree to political activities during the Haj.

The quota system for pilgrims was agreed by a meeting on the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) last year to ease pressure on holy sites during renovation work.

The Saudi official said no one will know until midnight Tuesday whether Iran will attend Wednesday's conference of pilgrimage ministers from 45 Islamic countries.

Riyadh has warned that strict Islamic law will be enforced against anyone who riots at this year's Haj.

Saudi Arabia "refuses to endanger the lives of pilgrims in the holy city of Mecca by demonstrations and violence... and it will use Islamic law for punishment," a Saudi official said in a statement to the Saudi Press Agency.

MIDDLE EAST NEWS IN BRIEF

Moroccan hero receives honours at funeral

CASABLANCA (R) — Morocco Sunday gave a state funeral to the pilot who saved King Hassan's life by flying his royal jet to safety after an attack by rebel air force pilots. Brigadier General Mohammed Kabbaj was promoted to head the air force after the incident in June 1972 during a failed coup attempt. Kabbaj, who became a national hero for keeping the king's plane aloft despite damage from the rebel jets, died last week of cancer. In a rare mark of respect, King Hassan went to Kabbaj's hospital bed side to pay his respects after hearing of the death Friday. Although the king did not attend the funeral, Moroccan Prime Minister Azzeddine Laraki and numerous other top personalities from the armed forces and politics in the kingdom were present.

King Fahd to visit Aden

MANAMA (AP) — King Fahd of Saudi Arabia has accepted an official invitation to visit South Yemen, according to Aden's ambassador to Saudi Arabia. The ambassador to Riyadh, Ghaleb Ali Gameel, told the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Sayassah that the date for the visit has yet to be fixed. The visit would be the first-ever by a monarch of the kingdom to Aden since it gained independence from Britain in November 1967 and subsequently became the Arab World's only self-proclaimed Marxist country. The ambassador said no Saudi monarch had been there since the 1950s. South Yemen has close economic and military ties with the Soviet Union. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and other Arab countries on the Arabian peninsula have been developing relations with Aden, prodding it towards merger with North Yemen and mediating an end to border frictions with Oman.

Libya urges Turkey to back demand

NICOSIA (R) — Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi has asked Turkey to back its demand that Italy pay compensation for "genocide" during its colonial rule. Qadhafi told Turkish businessmen West German compensation paid to Jews because of crimes during World War II set a precedent in international law for Libya's claim against Italy, the Libyan news agency IANA quoted Qadhafi as saying Sunday. "We would like to see Turkey taking the initiative for something similar (to be paid by Italy to Libya)... to safeguard the future of relations between the Turkish and Arab nations," IANA, received in Nicosia, quoted Qadhafi as saying. Italian colonialism was "not a political colonialism but an act of genocide and total destruction (with) a special character different to the other examples of colonialism," Qadhafi said. "Italy might be deprived of all economic benefits through its companies working in (Libya) if it does not compensate (Libyans) for the acts of murder, destruction and expulsion committed during the era of Italian colonialism," IANA, received in Nicosia, quoted him as saying. "We consider the giving of Libya to Italy in 1912 (by its former Turkish Ottoman rulers) a tragic action which hurt us deeply and this requires us to debate our relationship with Turkey in a particular manner," he said.

Syrian president to visit Iran

DAMASCUS (R) — President Hafez Al Assad is to visit Iran on his first trip there since the 1979 revolution, the official Syrian News Agency SANA reported Monday. It gave no date for the visit.

Saudi Arabia gives PLO $6 million

NICOSIA (R) — Saudi Arabia has given the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) a third grant of just over $6 million to help finance the uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories, PLO officials said Monday. Riyadh paid the PLO a total of $850.5 million under a 10-year pledge made in 1979 by Arab states to support the PLO and Arab states on the frontline of the conflict with Israel. King Fahd of Saudi Arabia earlier this year ordered new monthly payments of $6.02 million for the PLO.

SLA said to kill three in Lebanon

MIMAS, Lebanon (R) — Gunners of the pro-Israeli South Lebanon Army (SLA) killed three Druze militiamen and wounded seven Monday when they hit their jeep, security sources said. They said the jeep was hit in the village of Mimas on the edge of Israel's self-declared "security zone." One source said the fighters were on their way to the Souk Al Gharb area southeast of Beirut where their militia has been involved in heavy fighting against troops in Lebanon's Christian enclave.

Egypt to continue U.S. tank project

CAIRO (R) — Egypt will go ahead with a $2 billion plan to co-produce the U.S. main battle tank, a minister said Sunday.

"Egypt's programme for producing the U.S. M-1A1 tank will continue as planned," Minister of State for Military Production Gamal Ibrahim Al Sayed told reporters during a visit to a military plant outside Cairo.

In interviews over the past week, military sources told Reuters Egypt might scrap the plan as part of a sweeping review of projects by the new defence minister, Youssef Sabri Abu Taleb.

Sayed gave no further details. Defence Ministry sources said the issue would be raised Wednesday at an annual meeting in Cairo of the joint U.S.-Egyptian Military Cooperation Committee. The U.S. team will be led by Defence Under-Secretary Richard Armitage.

The first 15 of 555 M-1A1s are due to arrive in Egypt in 1991, but military sources said Egypt was short of more than $200 million for arms purchases that year.

They said the production line set up to assemble the tanks was at least six months behind schedule.

Egypt owes its mainly Western creditors a total of $43 billion. Washington has been pressing for repayment of $4.5 billion in military debt.

Although the direct cost of the M-1A1 will be covered by U.S. military grants of $1.5 billion a year, the sources said Egypt was having difficulty financing the tank factory.

Military sources also said Abu Taleb had been ordered to root out corruption in the armed services.

One Western source said Abu Taleb had instructions to probe any foreign exchange irregularities on the part of military personnel, close unauthorised accounts and end the armed forces' involvement in farming, manufacturing and construction.

Iranian leaders pursue crackdown amid political turmoil

By Ed Blanche
The Associated Press

NICOSIA — Iranian authorities have executed hundreds of people since August amid the political turmoil that has followed the Iran-Iraq war, and sources outside the country say a new wave of arrests is under way.

Iranian authorities have announced that "scores of counter-revolutionaries" and more than 500 drug offenders have been put to death since August. But human rights groups opposition sources outside Iran assert that the real number of executions could range from 1,000 to more than 12,000, and that many of the purported drug offenders executed may in fact be political opponents of the government.

The executions are the most numerous in Iran since 1980-81, when Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's loyalists turned on leftist and secular militants who helped them topple Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in the 1979 revolution.

There is speculation that the executions will continue, against a growing official outcry against "liberals" inside the country and signs of a power struggle within the Tehran hierarchy.

The liberals are in conflict with the revolution, Tehran's radical Jomhuri Eslami daily declared last week. "Why have they been left... to infiltrate every place they want to carry out wicked acts? ... The snakes are in their holes and waiting to release their poison."

In the Tehran political manoeuvring, hard-liners led by Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi appear now to hold the upper hand. Several leading figures associated with more moderate policies have already become casualties of the fundamentalist resurgence decreed by Khomeini in February.

Most prominent among them has been Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, who lost his status as the chosen successor to Khomeini as Iran's spiritual leader. Montazeri had called for a halt to executions and wider freedoms, and openly criticised the shortcomings of the 1979 revolution.

Some of the "counter-revolutionaries" that Tehran has acknowledged were executed were Montazeri's supporters.

Many were middle-ranking clerics, including Hojatoleslam Omid Najafabadi, a former revolutionary judge. They were described by intelligence Minister Mohammad Reza Shahrabi as "pseudo-clergymen... involved in various political, moral and corrupt offences."

The most powerful opposition movement to Khomeini outside Iran, the Iraqi-based Mujah-deen-e-Khalq, say that more than 12,000 political prisoners have been slain by the state in the last six months. It has listed by name 1,600 of the alleged victims, and says hundreds more people are being arrested now.

Amnesty International and the U.S. State Department have estimated that some 1,000 political prisoners have been executed, although some experts believe the true figure is probably far higher.

Iranian officials deny the dissidents' claim of 12,000 political executions. But the official media have acknowledged that scores of "counter-revolutionaries" have been publicly executed since August.

The media have also reported that nearly 550 alleged drug smugglers were hanged from mobile cranes and expressway overpasses in a score of cities under a draconian new anti-narcotics law that makes the death sentence mandatory for possession of even small amounts of drugs.

Iran is known to be waging a nationwide crackdown to stamp out rampant drug smuggling and abuse. But the drug crackdown began late last year, when the execution of political prisoners raised an international outcry over alleged human rights abuses, and the Mujahadeen claim that many of those executed without trial were drug smugglers.

The rebels said 200 dissidents were executed in the western city of Hamedan in recent weeks with the official explanation that they were drug smugglers. There was no way to confirm that claim independently.

Montazeri, before his forced resignation, wrote to Khomeini protesting "the execution of thousands of people" and "this genocide of prisoners, without trial."

He said the executions were personally ordered by Khomeini, who decreed that imprisoned supporters of the Mujahadeen and other opposition groups who did not "truly repent" should be killed.

"Blown up" or "gassed" There have been persistent reports of mass executions in Iranian prisons. Some dissident accounts claim that hundreds of prisoners, some of them held without trial for years, have been blown up or gassed to death.

Khomeini's supporters say that Montazeri was politically naive and allowed himself to become the mouthpiece for opponents of the regime.

Khomeini warned him in a letter accepting his resignation: "clean up your house of dishonest people and... keep away opponents of the system who masquerade as supporters of Islam."

But diplomats and analysts believe that Montazeri was reflecting growing uneasiness among many Iranians about the direction the revolution was going.

Amid radical resurgence, Mohtashemi, long closely linked with Lebanon's extremists, has called for a purge of "so-called liberals" and "the enemies of Islam" in Iran.

Khomeini recently declared: "As long as I am alive, I will not let the state fall into the hands of liberals."

Tehran newspapers have for weeks been echoing the outcry against the "liberals," a term believed to include Mehdi Bazargan, the republic's first prime minister.

He resigned in 1979 in protest against the storming of the U.S. embassy in Tehran. Since then he has led Iran's token internal opposition party despite constant harassment, and was becoming increasingly close to Montazeri.

Iran's military has not escaped the purge. Amid reports of executions among senior officers in the Revolutionary Guards Corps, the belief is growing that the radicals are eliminating their opponents in the military.

Iranian officials claimed last month that several networks of U.S. spies had been smashed, allegedly including senior figures in the navy and army, long distrusted because of its links with ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, and even the foreign ministry, whose officials have been branded as too pro-Western.

While there may indeed have been some U.S. agents operating in Iran, exiles and other sources suspect that purge was designed to deflect attention from Iran's economic and political problems:

Young businessmen assess Jordan's economic potential

AMMAN (Petra) — A delegation representing the Young Executives of Business Companies Organisation met here Monday with Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Ibrahim Izzeddin to discuss general topics related to the Jordanian economy and investments.

Izzeddin briefed the visitors on the country's investment prospects and incentives for encouraging investors. He said that investment to public and private sectors is continuously being encouraged by the government which also strives to promote trade exchange with various countries.

The head of the delegation, whose organisation groups 6,000 members representing companies in 70 countries, said that their visit to Jordan is in the course of a fact-finding mission to learn about the country's economic and investment potentials and to pave the way for opening a branch for the organisation in Amman.

He said that the private sector in Jordan has recently joined the organisation and six heads of local companies are now considered organisation members.

The delegation leader said he will meet with several officials and Jordanian businessmen and will make visits to various economic sites to explore areas where organisation members can launch joint ventures.

Mu'ta holds smoking seminar

KARAK (Petra, J.T.) — Mu'ta University Monday organised a seminar on combatting smoking in the course of a general campaign in the Karak Governorate against the habit.

University President Ali Mahafza addressed the seminar voicing support for various anti-smoking campaigns in the country as launched by the Jordan National Anti-Smoking Society, and the government's recent measures to eliminate the smoking habit.

The society vice president addressed the session outlining various programmes being implemented by the society in cooperation with the Health Ministry to reduce smoking as a measure to safeguard public health.

He said that by the beginning of June a general meeting will be held at the Professional Association Complex in Amman to discuss smoking hazards.

The Mu'ta seminar reviewed six working papers on the adverse effects of smoking on socio-economic development and the danger of smoking to pregnant mothers, and its direct cause of various diseases. The participants in the seminar, who represented the university staff, community colleges and various local organisations, also watched slides and a documentary film focusing on the dangers of smoking on public health.

Similar seminars were held earlier this year at Yarmouk University in Irbid and also in Amman. The Health Ministry in March banned smoking in public places in implementation of a 1977 law on public health, and said that violators of the law will be liable to strict punishment stated under that law.

Fact-finding mission arrives

AMMAN (J.T.) — A United Nations fact finding mission has arrived in Amman on a four-day visit to Jordan to gather information about the situation in the occupied Arab territories.

Dr. Mahmoud Al Sa'id the mission's head said that the group will meet with Jordanian officials and the Speaker of the Palestine National Council Sheikh Abdul Hamid Al Sayeh as well as representatives of the Palestine refugee camps in Jordan with the purpose of gathering information on the Palestinian people living in the occupied territories.

The group will also learn about the Israeli authorities' practices against the Palestinian people and against the Palestinian economic, social and educational institutions in the occupied lands. Sa'id said in a statement quoted by the Jordan News Agency, Petra.

Sa'id and his group is here in the course of a tour in the Middle East to carry out a mission assigned to them by the United Nations press office.

Information gathered in this respect will be of immense benefit for the world public opinion which wants to know the real facts about the Middle East and the Israeli occupied Arab territory. Sa'id said.

He said that the United Nations is in the practice of dispatching missions to the region on a periodic basis to prepare detailed reports on the situation based on reliable information following close study of the region.

He said that the journalists picked out for the mission will also publish their findings in their own newspapers and magazines.

Upon their arrival here the mission's members were met by officials from the Ministry of Information and the Foreign Ministry's Department of Palestinian Affairs.

The announcement was made by the Department of Antiquities whose teams have been conducting the digs in cooperation with the British Institute for Archaeology and History over the past 40 days, according to a department spokesman.

The spokesman said that the digs are within a department programme designed to unearth various artefacts in the Karak region.

Ghandour: RJ revenues exceed expectations

AMMAN (Petra) — Ali Ghandour, chairman and chief executive officer of Royal Jordanian (RJ), said Monday that RJ revenues in hard currency exceeded expectations and increase surpassed last year's by 50 per cent for a savings of about JD 200 million in hard currency.

In a press conference, Ghandour said that RJ capital is JD 10 million with a paid capital of JD 20 million. RJ has a modern fleet and its flights cover 44 world capitals with over 300 Jordanian pilots and some foreigners.

Ghandour informed journalists. "In addition, RJ has 5,121 employees, most of whom are Jordanians, earning JD 32 million in annual salaries," he said.

Noting that none of the carrier's planes are more than eight years old, Ghandour said: "We got used, through our Jordanian experience and our own determination, to convert whatever is negative to positive."

RJ's expectations for operating revenues for 1989, Ghandour added, are expected to be $287.2 million while operating expenditures are expected at $241.2 — thus making an operating surplus of $46 million.

Ghandour pointed out that RJ's revenues from maintaining foreign planes are about $4 million. In addition to this, he said, RJ has investments in hotels as well as shares. Referring to the proposal about converting RJ into a shareholding company, he said: "The idea is still there, and we have made big steps in preparation for this conversion."

Agrarian conference addresses agricultural mechanisation

AMMAN (Petra) — A five-day round-table conference on agrarian reform and rural development organised by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) resumed meetings in Amman Monday with the delegates discussing several research papers dealing with the subject as presented by different participating countries.

One of the working papers dealt with agricultural mechanisation in the Near East region and its effect on production. The paper dwelt on areas where agricultural engineers and experts can help increase production, control of water resources for farming and marketing issues.

In an address at the opening session Sunday, Minister of Higher Education Nasseruddin Al

Assad said that migration from rural to urban areas leaves a negative impact on agricultural production.

Assad reviewed Jordan's experience in the field of rural development and pointed to infrastructure in socio-economic services and the development of water resources and communications and electricity for rural regions in the Kingdom.

The Amman-based regional Centre for an Agrarian Reform and Rural Development organised the conference in a bid to promote regional cooperation in rural development in the Near East region and to review ways to promote specialised services in agrarian reform and rural development.

International energy conference opens

Badran: Jordan's oil, gas deposits proven

AMMAN (Petra) — A national oil prospecting programme being implemented in the country by the Natural Resources Authority (NRA) in cooperation with a group of foreign oil companies has proved the presence of oil and natural gas deposits in the Kingdom, Minister of Agriculture and acting Minister of Energy and Mineral Resources Adnan Badran announced Monday.

Jordan continues to import crude oil for its domestic use but the NRA is striving to find larger quantities of oil to make the Kingdom self-sufficient in this energy source before the end of the century, the minister said at the opening session of a three day international conference on energy systems held at the University of Jordan.

More than 100 specialists and engineers from Jordan, Arab and foreign countries taking part in the conference will review 31 working papers dealing with energy resources, with special focus on the use of solar and wind power as alternative sources of energy.

Badran reviewed the energy situation in Jordan and its links with the employment of technology. By adopting sound and wise plans in energy fields Jordan has reduced the heavy burden of oil imports and introduced ways for rational employment of different forms of energy, Badran said.

Since the creation of the Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources four years ago, the Kingdom has reduced the growth in national demand for energy to a mere one per cent annually, compared with high levels in the past year, Badran noted.

The opening session was addressed by Dr. Bassam Abu Ghazaleh, University of Jordan's deputy president for scientific faculties and dean of the engineering faculty, who outlined Jordan's programmes in solar and wind power as alternative sources.

Later, the minister opened an exhibition displaying energy equipment and methods for rationalising energy consumption. The exhibition was organised by the Jordan Engineers Association (JEA) which organised the meeting in cooperation with the Royal Scientific Society and the Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources as well as a number of local companies.

According to the JEA's President Laith Shbeilat the conference aims to focus light on modern research in energy systems with special attention to ways of preserving energy and the use of renewable energy resources as well as exchange of expertise and information among various research centres.

Rawabdeh: Amman grapples with population growth

CAIRO (Petra) — Amman, like many other capitals in the developing world, faces difficulties in developing its local administration to deal with continuous and fast population growth issues; but it is striving with its limited resources and staff to achieve that goal, Greater Municipality of Amman Mayor Abdul Raouf Al Rawabdeh said here Monday.

Unlike the capitals of various countries Amman has been facing a population explosion, demanding increased municipal services resulting from continued migration from rural to urban areas and the forced migration of Palestinians who were evicted by the Israeli occupation authorities in Palestine, Rawabdeh said in an address to the opening session of a conference by 19 capitals representing the newly formed World Capitals Organisation (WCO).

The rapid growth in population has not been matched by an equal level in services and administrative organisation to meet the growing and pressing demand on services, Rawabdeh noted.

Amman, he said, is giving priority to the question of protecting the environment from pollution and is dealing with the problem of disposing of waste.

The organisation, which was established last year, has chosen Amman to represent the capitals of the Western Asia region because Amman was one of the founding capitals of the new organisation. Rawabdeh said that the organisation will address major problems confronting the world's capitals and preparations for next year's conference which will be held in Dakar.

High time for Egypt's return

THE projected Arab summit at Casablanca on May 23 will not only be extraordinary in form and substance but also remarkable in the sense that Egypt will be formally reinstated in the Arab fold after so many years of absence. Cairo's presence in all future Arab summits would naturally provide such gatherings with the kind of vigour and stamina that could make all the difference as far as the cohesion and strength of the Arab World are concerned. Yet to restore to Egypt its natural and logical role within Arab ranks is only the beginning of a long and tortuous road towards full Arab integration into one coherent policy that could serve all the Arab peoples equally and fairly. With its centrist policies, both political and economic, Egypt could very well act as a central force to pull the rest of the Arab World in the direction of moderation and common sense.

Such sense of centrism would naturally have a bearing on several Arab conflicts and issues such as Lebanon and the Arab-Israeli conflict. To be sure centrism should not be confused with policies and perspectives that betray basic and legitimate Arab aspirations and rights on all fronts. Past Arab summits have cemented such principled positions with resolutions that have been reaffirmed over and over again.

The Casablanca Arab summit may still find it imperative to evolve and develop previous summit decisions with a view to making them more relevant and operational in the present circumstances. The tragedy that has repeatedly bit Arab summits lies in the proposition that many of them remained ink on paper. No true Arab would want to see Arab summit resolutions face the same fate of mass-produced U.N. resolutions. This time around the Arab World would like to see that the Casablanca Arab summit be labelled extraordinary not only in name and form but also because of its extraordinary determination to translate dreams into realities. Let the Arab leaders forget, the Iraq-Iran front is still hot and the occupied Arab territories and Lebanon are even hotter. These conflicts and the many other issues that still confront the Arab Nation are awaiting an overall Arab redress in a tangible and effective manner. This is particularly so in view of the fact that most if not all of these conflicts have reached critical junctures and require deep soul searching on an overall Arab scale. The Casablanca summit could and should be the Arab forum to provide the answers to at least some of these Arab concerns.

JORDAN PRESS EDITORIALS

Al Ra'i daily Monday commented on the current preparations for the coming summit meeting which will be held in Casablanca. The paper said that as the Arabs are involved in these preparations they ought to remember that an invitation to Egypt to attend is of paramount importance in view of this country's significant role within the Arab World and its importance for the collective Arab action. Egypt's insistence on receiving an invitation to attend the meeting, long before the summit, is quite natural and expected otherwise Cairo would not be able to take part in the joint efforts to solve inter-Arab problems, the paper noted. It said that the countries of the Arab Cooperation Council insist that Egypt should be invited so that they can attend and that they do not want to see the Arab World divided over this issue. Those who are keen on convening the summit later this month should remember that welcoming back Egypt to the Arab fold is a must and that no challenge can be confronted and no problem can be solved without its participation, the paper concluded.

Sawt Al Shaab daily discussed Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's proposals for elections in the occupied territories. Shamir's plan is a clearly designed as a tactical ploy and not intended to achieve a lasting peace in the Middle East since it does not provide for full recognition of the Palestinian people's rights in their homeland, the paper said. Shamir has intended the plan as a means of undermining the Arab revolt and create the climate for the Zionists to impose substitutes for the PLO, the paper noted. It was also designed to mislead the world public opinion and to divert the world community's attention away from the ongoing atrocities by Israeli troops against the Palestinians, added the paper. It said that the plan considers the Palestinian people not as legitimate owners of the land of Palestine but merely as a minority living among the Jews and is therefore doomed to failure.

A columnist in Al Ra'i Monday comments on the U.S.-Soviet negotiations which were held in Moscow last week and which resulted in agreement over a number of matters of concern to the world community as a whole. The two superpowers seem to have come to an agreement on means of solving the Middle East issue by making all parties offer some concessions and compromises so that an acceptable formula can be reached, Mahmoud Al Rimawi notes. He says that this means that the PLO as well as Israel will be involved in the coming process and that the United States which used to hold a similar view to that of Israel is no more adhering to its adamant position and hard stand. The consensus reached in Moscow, the writer says, means that the Israeli occupation is no more tolerated and that it has to end to save the region further bloodshed. Therefore, the writer concludes, it is quite possible for the superpowers to come to a consensus soon on a formula for ending the Arab-Israeli conflict specially as the intifada continues to serve as a form of pressure on the Israelis to leave the Arab land.

2. The document includes:
a. The principles on which the initiative is based.
b. Details of the processes for its implementation.
c. Reference to the subject of the elections under consideration.

the following points:

a. Israel yearns for peace and the continuation of the political process by means of direct negotiations based on the principles of the Camp David Accords.

b. Israel opposes the establishment of a Palestinian state in the Gaza district and the area between Israel and Jordan.

c. Israel will not conduct negotiations with the PLO.

d. There will be no change in the status of Judea, Samaria and Gaza other than in accordance with the basic guidelines of the government.

Subjects to be dealt with in the peace process

4. a. Israel views as important that the peace between Israel and Egypt based on the Camp David Accords will serve as a cornerstone for enlarging the circle of peace in the region, and calls for a common endeavour for the strengthening of the peace and its extension through continued consultations.

b. Israel calls for the establishment of peace relations between it and those Arab states which still maintain a state of war with it for the purpose of promoting a comprehensive settlement for the Arab-Israeli conflict, including recognition, direct negotiations, ending the boycott, diplomatic relations, cessation of hostile activity in international institutions or forums, and regional and bilateral cooperation.

c. Israel calls for an international endeavour to resolve the problem of the residents of the Arab refugee camps in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza district in order to improve their living conditions and to rehabilitate them.

Israel is prepared to be a partner in this endeavour.

d. In order to advance the political negotiation process leading to peace, Israel proposes free and democratic elections among the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts in an atmosphere devoid of violence, threats and terror. In these elections, a representation will be chosen to conduct negotiations for a transitional period of self-rule. This period will constitute a test for coexistence and cooperation. At a later stage, negotiations will be conducted for a permanent solution during which all the proposed options will be examined and peace between Israel and Jordan will be achieved.

e. All the above mentioned steps should be dealt with simultaneously.

f. The details of what has been mentioned in D above will be given below.

Principles constituting the initiative stages

5. The initiative is based on two stages:

a. Stage A. A transitional period for an interim agreement.

b. Stage B. Permanent solution.

6. The interlock between the stages is a timetable on which the plan is built: The peace process delineated by the initiative is based on (U.N. Security Council) Resolutions 242 and 338 upon which the Camp David Accords are founded.

Timetable

7. The transitional period will continue for five years.

8. As soon as possible, but not later than the third year after the beginning of the transitional period, negotiations for achieving a permanent solution will begin.

Parties participating in the negotiations in both stages

9. The parties participating in the negotiations for the first stage (the interim agreement) shall include Israel and the elected representation of the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts. Jordan and Egypt will be invited to participate in these negotiations if they so desire.

10. The parties participating in the negotiations for the second stage (permanent solution) shall include Israel and the elected representation of the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts as well as Jordan; furthermore, Egypt may participate in these negotiations. In negotiations between Israel and Jordan in which the elected representation of the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts will participate, the peace treaty between Israel and Jordan will be concluded.

Substance of the transitional period

11. During the transitional period, the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of the Judea, Samaria and Gaza districts will be accorded self-rule by means of which they will, themselves, conduct their affairs of daily life. Israel will continue to be responsible for security, foreign affairs and all matters concerning Israeli citizens in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts. Topics involving the implementation of the plan for self-rule will be considered and decided within the framework of the negotiations for an interim agreement.

Substance of the permanent solution

12. In the negotiations for a permanent solution, every party shall be entitled to present for discussion all the subjects it may wish to raise.

13. The aim of the negotiations should be:

a. The achievement of a permanent solution acceptable to the negotiating parties.

b. The arrangements for peace and borders between Israel and Jordan.

Details of the process for the implementation of the initiative

14. First and foremost dialogue and basic agreement by the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts, as well as Egypt and Jordan if they wish to take part as above mentioned in the negotiation on the principles constituting the initiative.

15. a. Immediately afterwards will follow the stage of preparations and implementation of the election process in which a representation of the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and Gaza will be elected. This representation:

I. Shall be a partner to the conduct of negotiations for the transitional period (interim agreement).

II. Shall constitute the self-governing authority in the course of the transitional period.

III. Shall be the central Palestinian component, subject to agreement after three years, in the negotiations for the permanent solution.

b. In the period of the preparations and implementation, there shall be a calming of the violence in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts.

16. As to the substance of the elections, it is recommended that a proposal of regional elections be adopted, the details of which shall be determined in further discussions.

17. Every Palestinian Arab residing in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza districts who shall be elected by the inhabitants to represent them — after having submitted his candidacy in accordance with the detailed documents which shall determine the subject of the elections — may be a legitimate participant in the conduct of negotiations with Israel.

18. The elections shall be free, democratic and secret.

19. Immediately after the election of the Palestinian representation, negotiations shall be conducted with it on an interim agreement for a transitional period which shall continue for five years as mentioned above. In these negotiations the parties shall determine all the subjects relating to the substance to the self-rule and the arrangements necessary for its implementation.

20. As soon as possible, but not later than the third year after the establishment of the self-rule, negotiations for a permanent solution shall begin. During the whole period of these negotiations until the signing of the agreement for a permanent solution, the self-rule shall continue in effect as determined in the negotiations for an interim agreement.

Environment: More words than deeds

By Mostafa K. Tolba

The writer is undersecretary-general of the United Nations and executive director of the United Nations Environment Programme. The article is reprinted from the International Herald Tribune.

GENEVA — In less time than it takes to read this article, the world will spend more on armaments than the $35 million or so it gives each year to the global organisation that it set up nearly 20 years ago to protect the environment.

In Nairobi during the next two weeks (May 15 to 26), the governing body of the United Nations Environment Programme will be presented with a radical agenda that responds to the growing demand of the public worldwide for action to address the environmental crisis.

As interest in the environment has grown, however, UNEP's resources have shrunk in real terms.

UNEP has been widely praised as the prime mover behind the recent international agreements to protect the ozone layer and control the movement of hazardous waste. Our new agenda is designed to build on those achievements by concentrating on key issues — including the controlling of greenhouse gases — on which further progress can be made. But unless extra resources are forthcoming from the international community, I may have to end the Nairobi meeting with an announcement of forced cutbacks.

On a world scale, the financial problems of a small U.N. organisation do not amount to much. But our experience may be a microcosm of a much graver problem: the gap between words and deeds. Despite the welcome new attention to the environment on the part of world leaders, signs of readiness to deal with the root causes of environmental destruction are few and far between.

These causes lie in the wasteful and inequitable conduct of the world economy. The impact is greatest in the developing world. In the face of economic crisis, debt, falling commodity prices and Northern protectionism, the choices available to governments and peoples in developing countries are limited. In some cases, there is scarcely any choice at all. I was struck recently by a filmed interview of a farmer whose poverty had forced him to take a job felling tropical forest for charcoal. "I am destroying my family's future," he said. "But what can I do? We have to survive."

Hundreds of millions of people like him are being forced to adopt a life-style approaching self-immolation. Unless the international community provides opportunities for the underprivileged to plan for a better future, grand treaties, high-sounding resolutions and international declarations to safeguard our environment ring hollow.

What is needed is a massive transfer of resources from the industrialised to the poor countries. Throwing money at the problem will not make it go away, but it will help.

Opinion polls testify that the public in the industrialised countries is ready to see extra resources raised through innovative taxation, savings from disarmament, and debt remission directed to better development.

It has to be done on terms acceptable to the South. Already there are rumblings of discontent that environment has become a cover for conditionality in grants and loans, and for unwarranted interference in national development. The charge of "environmental imperialism" must be avoided at all costs.

The first priority must be to direct resources to help developing countries build up their own capacity to cope with environmental problems. I am talking of training, the transfer of know-how, institution-building and public education.

That assistance has to be committed over 20 to 30 years. Right now, few governments plan on this kind of time scale. Investment in infrastructure-building to manage natural resources brings few immediate benefits. Difficult as it may seem, long-term commitments have to be made.

As the scientific evidence for depletion of the ozone layer hardens, the industrialised countries are coming to realise what UNEP has for so long maintained: that environmental destruction is out of control. Norway recently offered some $100 million every year, and Finland $2 million, for a start to an International Climate Fund to assist the developing countries, through the United Nations, to acquire CFC substitutes and alternative technologies to limit ozone depletion. This is very encouraging. Other countries should follow suit quickly.

A similar approach is needed for other problems — safe disposal of hazardous waste, soil and water conservation, protection of seas and tropical forests, combating desertification. These problems are global in scope, but their resolution ultimately relies on strong and coordinated national action.

The world desperately needs convincing evidence that progress is being made, in order to stiffen its resolve to tackle the hidden causes of the crisis: debt, overconsumption and unfair terms of trade.

In Nairobi in the next two weeks, we will have a barometer to test whether governments are prepared to provide such evidence by supporting the institution they set up to help protect the human environment.

Venezuelan leader backs austerity despite unrest

By David Brough

REUTERS — President Carlos Andres Perez is determined to push through an austerity programme despite labour unrest and the bloodiest riots in Venezuela's democratic history which marked his first 100 days in office.

Perez, an energetic Social Democrat who took office on Feb. 2, said within days of the riots in late February that he would not turn back from his economic austerity programme, designed to win international Monetary Fund (IMF) credits.

"There's no question of changing tack. I will continue the path we have started on," he said in a television interview in early March.

Official estimates say 297 people were killed and 1,800 injured from Feb. 27 to March 1 in the worst disturbances since the military government of Marcos Perez Jimenez fell in 1958.

Perez, who was Venezuela's elected president from 1974 to 1979, when he nationalised the oil industry, denied rumours of a military coup after the riots.

"The president enjoys good health and as far as the Venezuelan armed forces (are concerned), one can no longer talk here about a military coup," Perez said in April.

The riots were to protest against the austerity package on Feb. 16 that sharply raised petrol and electricity prices when price controls were lifted to liberalise the heavily centralised economy. Despite the riots and the prospect of a general strike called for May 18 by the main trade union group, the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers (CTV), Perez is sticking firmly to his austerity programme.

"The president has been very clear that we are going to make strong adjustments," chief government spokesman, Pastor Heydra told Reuters.

Perez has said the austerity policies are necessary to ensure new credits to invest in economic development and rebuild foreign exchange reserves depleted by falling oil revenues and heavy spending on imports and debt payments.

The leader of the Christian Democrat opposition, Eduardo Feroandez, has rejected the government's austerity policies, saying people could not afford them and they could lead to the collapse of the economy.

"We are living in the most delicate moment of the last 30 years," he said in a recent speech, referring to the period of democracy in Venezuela.

"Neither the president nor the government seems to understand the magnitude of the problem before us. We have to save our democracy. We are living through the collapse of an economic model."

The general strike this month, the first since 1958, was expected to be a test of the strength of opposition to Perez's austerity policies, diplomats and analysts said.

"There could be violence but nothing on the scale of the riots in February," a Western diplomat said.

Rafael Sureda, an international politics professor at Caracas state-run Central University, told Reuters: "Violence on May 18 is not the interests of the left and the CTV because they know the people would blame them."

The ruling Democratic Action Party has said workers have the right to stage the general strike but warned it would do considerable damage to the economy.

Heydra said he believed Venezuelans accepted that the government had to take austerity measures but added that it was still painful.

"You are hurt (by the measures) but you understand," he said.

Diplomats said that discontent was growing among the people, who have seen their purchasing power plunge since the measures took effect, pushing the country deeper into recession.

They estimated that up to half of the working population may be living on less than the minimum wage of 4,000 bolivars ($110) per month; many of them working in swollen black economy.

Venezuelans experienced an explosion of price speculation by businessmen after price controls were lifted in February, economists and government sources said.

But eggs and fish prices had started falling and neighbourhood associations, which have proliferated under Perez's government, were appealing to consumers to boycott shops that were overcharging, they said.

Oil — the bridge to development

By Ghadeer Taher

Special to the Jordan Times
Interdependence on the Oil Bridge: Risks and Opportunities, Ali Ahmed Attiga, 1988. Petroleum Information Committee of the Arab Gulf States Bookcraft Ltd., Bath, Avon

THE FUTURE of the Middle East will continue to depend on oil and the development of the region's states will hinge on their respective abilities to efficiently use the resource to attain a level of industrialisation because the "black gold" of the earth is not an abundant, limitless resource.

With accusations of oil over-production flying about and lack of a definite market strategy and stability in Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) price levels, the scarcity of a once-believed abundant resource is even more evident than in 1986 when the rug was almost pulled from under the feet of the oil producers and the price of oil tumbled tremendously.

Despite the slight rebound since mid-1988, oil prices remain lower than their actual market value; the long-term impact of low prices is a new crisis facing the oil-exporting countries.

This crisis could be preempted and the wheels could be set on the right track for stable development in the fields of energy and economy through cooperation between oil-exporting and oil-importing states on the one hand and among oil exporters in the developing world on the other. This is the message conveyed by Dr. Ali Ahmed Attiga in his book, "Interdependence on the Oil Bridge: Risks and Opportunities."

The book, published in 1988, covers developments in the fields of oil production and pricing, the evolution of events that adversely affected the relatively strong position of the oil-exporting developing countries at the turn of the decade and their economic growth and quest for consumer and industrial self-sufficiency, could easily be described as highly-informative and thought-provoking; though, by design or coincidence, the author has sidestepped in-depth analysis of some key issues such as the bickering among oil producers and the vast geographical, demographic, political and social differences which make it almost impossible to apply the same parameters to development in various oil-producing under-developed countries.

Attiga, former secretary-general of the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC), stresses that oil resources are, in the long run, scarce and depletable assets and that this basic fact should not be obscured by the recent fall in oil prices resulting from "temporary excess production" combined with an urgent need for hard currency by some OPEC member states which face foreign debts accumulated as a result of anticipated exports at prices that prevailed in the early 1980s.

At the same time, developed countries, represented by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), have followed a policy of confrontation with OPEC states, particularly after the 1973 oil embargo, in a bid to keep a tight rein on oil prices.

Systematic pressure

According to Attiga, the most important and concrete action was taken at the infamous Washington energy conference of 1974 which established the International Energy Agency (IEA) in order to lower oil prices by breaking up OPEC and pushing member countries to vie individually for shares in the oil market.

Simultaneous with the IEA drive, which fell short of its secondary aim of sowing discord between oil-producing developing states and oil-importers, OECD countries also sought, though with limited success, to develop alternatives to oil at steep research costs by utilising energy derived through solar rays, wind, coal and nuclear fusion.

At one point, energy and oil conservation, as well as developing alternative sources of energy, became the concern of both oil-exporting and oil-importing countries. Although this convergence of interests was short-lived, it would have served both interests if this coordinated policy was followed since oil is the fastest depleting energy source, according to Attiga.

Unfortunately, present policy is not based on cooperation but confrontation and this policy, coupled with falling demand, has relegated OPEC oil to a second choice in the oil market, forcing down the cartel's output to around 20 million barrels per day (bpd) — around one third of world production. The market has been transformed to one controlled by major buyers as a consequence of the systematic, organised and coordinated policies adopted by the developed world — a far cry from the situation in the 1970s.

This powerful position maintained by oil importers "against the weak and difficult" position of oil exporters — both in and outside OPEC — led to the dramatic price collapse in 1986 when the price of oil per barrel tumbled from $31 to almost $11.

Culprit or victim?

Was oil the culprit or the victim of the global energy transition? If indeed it was the culprit, then whose policies were responsible for making it play this villainous role?

According to Attiga, "the real culprits in this case would be those who allowed short-term national interest and sheer business profits to govern their decisions on energy resources allocations." He argues that the notion that oil resource are virtually unlimited and that the prices of alternative sources of energy would make oil uncompetitive in the market even at its 1960 prices was widely propagated by the international oil companies. He recalls that oil-exporting developing states which are now members of OPEC had no means to make their own assessment and probe the validity of this notion and thus were subject to manipulations by the international conglomerates which continuously sought to keep down the prices.

However, the establishment of OPEC in September 1960, prompted by pressure on prices and a sense of collective resistance by producers, prevented further formal price decreases by the oil companies, but real prices continued to decrease sharply throughout the 1960s under the pressure of inflation and balances of trade which were always in favour of developed countries.

Despite the heavy dependence of developing countries as a group on oil resources, whether for domestic consumption or export, the energy planners of the world, particularly in the industrially advanced countries, are predicting the exhaustion of oil resources before that of all other sources of depletable energy reserves. This was one of the main conclusions of the twelfth congress of the world energy conference held in New Delhi in September 1974. It also asserted that oil was the "real culprit in the recent upset because its availability is still suspect."

Following the 1973 embargo against the U.S. due to its support for Israel, thousands of seminars and research papers blamed the rise in the price of oil for the "energy crisis." The mass media in the West also propagated the idea that oil price hikes were responsible for the economic recession Western countries were facing, the press also concluded that OPEC members, mostly the Arabs, were responsible for the "old and new ills of the oil-importing countries," and thus the oil producers were the target of two-fold pressure: one stemming from the OECD state's drive to push down prices and the other from the West's dedicated politically-motivated campaign to avert being caught in a repeated experience of the 1973 embargo.

Turning to the central theme of economic and industrial development in Arab oil producing states, Attiga asserts that "at best, in the long run, oil can only serve as a bridge to alternative sources of energy. At the same time it should serve as another bridge — one to alternative sources of income through economic development and viable investments." Basic consumer industries, petrochemicals, agriculture, foreign portfolios etc. are viable avenues towards such a goal.

Strength and length

In this sense, the strength and the length of the oil bridge will be determined by at least three factors: (a) the level of the oil price; (b) the rate of oil depletion; and (c) the efficiency with which oil revenues are used in the oil-exporting countries.

"If these three factors are managed in a way as to maintain a reasonably high and stable price with a moderate rate of depletion and with relatively productive investments in the oil exporting countries, then the oil bridge will permit a smooth transition in energy and development as these countries approach the post-oil era," Attiga says.

Otherwise, he warns, "the bridge may collapse under the weight of waste, inefficiency and mismanagement in both the oil-exporting and oil-importing countries." The emerging scene indicates that the 21st century will probably witness the worst oil and energy crisis history has ever seen, and in such a dismal situation, "the oil-exporting countries would be the greatest losers of all."

"Under the worst-case scenario of low oil prices and high depletion rates, they could find themselves without oil and without financial reserves at the time. Moreover, their national economies would have been unable to develop alternative sources of income because of excessive fragmentation and heavy dependence on the export of cheap oil," Attiga asserts and outlines what can be done to avert such a bleak future.

Advocating the concept of collective action among the Arab countries as an inevitable element in order to preempt the gloomy scenario, Attiga points out that inter-Arab trade and investments are far below desired levels. "A collective development policy should give top priority to these two vital and strategic aspects of regional cooperation," he says and details the fundamentals that should govern the policy. Development of human resources is another priority area as is development of research and applied technology.

Mix and mismatch

By A. Jawad Sheikh

TELEVISION'S latest attempt to tackle the personal implications rather than the politics of race, Shalom Salsam, (BBC-2) may have failed to please the critics but it is surely a welcome stimulus to thought. For, increasingly, the evidence is that mixed-race marriages are more vulnerable and that those involved in them are in greater danger of psychological breakdown.

I came to the United Kingdom in 1981 for further training and experience in psychiatry. In my first job as a senior house officer in a hospital in Essex, I met my wife who is white and British. We have been married for four years and are happily settled with two children.

Our relationship, however, sparked off a chain of events which were painful and stressful to say the least. We continue to deal with the complexities of the relationship, which not only include the family and society but, most important, our personal understanding and willingness to adapt.

My experience and that of the adults and children who came to my psychiatric clinics prompted me to explore the apparently increased vulnerability of those involved in a mixed marriage. Problems ranged from individual dissatisfaction, disappointments, marital conflicts and divorce, depression and anxiety. I saw the children in a state of intense confusion and distress about their identity and sense of belonging. The issue affects not only the individuals or the children; it affects society and its political and cultural conflicts.

We can define race as a group of people of common ancestry, distinguished from others by physical characteristics — some striking, some subtle. Races also differ in their cultural background, traditions, language, belief systems and temperament. We are only too aware throughout our lives that ethnicity — our "roots" — is a powerful influence in determining our identity and recognition in society. By providing a sense of belonging and of historical continuity, it meets a basic psychological need.

An ethnic group has been defined as "those who conceive of themselves as alike by virtue of their common ancestry, real or fictitious, and who are also regarded thus by others." Ethnicity is more than race, religion or national and geographic origin. It patterns our thinking, feeling and behaviour in both obvious and subtle ways. It plays a major role in determining our lives.

Britain is a cosmopolitan society. There are today more than two million immigrants from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan. One of the outcomes of such a mixed race society is mixed marriage. According to national and housing surveys the proportion of New Commonwealth and Pakistani to white marriages is one in 330 and according to Labour Force Survey the proportion is one in 240.

These inter-ethnic marriages should represent about one quarter of all marriages in which one or both partners are from a non-white ethnic group. The Labour Force Survey also shows that both partners are white in 96 per cent of mixed marriages; in 2 per cent of marriages both partners come from the same non-white ethnic group and just under 1 per cent of coloured marriages are between partners, one of whom is white and the other from an ethnic minority group.

Views about inter-marriage are paradoxical. On one hand it disrupts family patterns and connections, but on the other hand it opens systems to new patterns, connections and the possibility of creative transformations in life. Becoming familiar with a different culture may be an enriching experience that provides new flexibility to a system. Complementary ethnic values, patterns and attitudes may enhance the potential of the marriage.

Creative children

Some authors suggest that inter-marriages are more likely to produce creative children — as well as children who cannot reconcile the diversity. Recent literature confirms that ethnically mixed couples are more likely to get divorced, a further trauma for their children.

There are six major factors which influence the degree of adjustment required in a mixed-race marriage. The first is the extent of the difference in values between the cultural groups. For example, an Irish/English couple who share the same religion and language will experience less stress and disparity than an English/Asian couple who are diverse, not only in religion and language, but also in race and colour.

Secondly, the difference in the degree of acculturation of each spouse: a couple is likely to have more difficulty if one spouse is an immigrant and the other a later generation Briton. Thirdly, religious differences add extra stress: it would be easier for an Asian and British couple who share the same religion than who do not.

The fourth factor is the extent of racial prejudice between the two groups. Where this is strong, the inter-racial couple may be alienated from both families and racial groups and may thus be forced into couple isolation. In addition, their children often experience great difficulty in establishing a clear identity and may suffer discrimination from both groups.

Then there are socio-economic differences. Partners who come from very different backgrounds may find their cultures place different values on financial status or "class".

The last factor is familiarity with each other's culture before marriage: it will be easier for both families to accept a new spouse if they already know people from that cultural group. Families living in a heterogeneous neighbourhood are probably more prepared for their children to inter-marry than those living in a homogeneous one.

Couples typically anticipate at the beginning of their relationship that they can overcome all odds. If their relationship is formed in reaction to family injunctions or in rebellion against family values, they may handle conflicts about the inter-marriage by distancing from both extended families. Or one spouse may fuse into the other's family by religious conversion or by adopting the basics of the other culture.

Another important aspect of inter-marriage is male and female roles. Historically most cultural groups have ascribed separate and defined roles for male and female. The most common division of roles have been for men to provide and for women to nurture. Asian women, for example, often become powerful in later life, after the death of their husbands. Because of the great emotional attachment the older son feels towards his devoted mother, the wishes of the mother are frequently respectfully attended to by the son. Thus, although the older son is the ruler of the family, it is frequently the mother who rules the son, and therefore the rest of the family. Irish women, on the other hand have tended to be openly dominant in family life and to be considered morally superior to men. The expected roles of husband and wife differ greatly from one culture to another. Couples may find themselves at best mystified, at worst in serious conflict when their cultural background provides a misfit of expectations.

Differences in style of communication, handling of conflict, attitude towards intimacy and dependence, and attitude towards grief and sadness are all potential areas of misunderstanding and conflict. Different values and attitudes about raising children can aggravate the conflicts of mixed race couples. Although loving their children with equal intensity, they may express it very differently.

A partner who marries out reactively and raises children without teaching them his or her native language or cultural tradition, may later regret that decision as the children grow up with little sense of ethnic identity. A partner who leaves his or her country of origin may later experience painful longings for homeland and roots. The implications of the decision to marry out may only be appreciated many years later, as the need for a supportive and familiar context intensifies. The impact of a decision to inter-marry may thus not be appreciated until complex new family structures are in place and a loyalty conflict cannot be resolved.

Obviously, I personally support and encourage inter-racial marriage; such relationships take courage and a broader outlook to break the artificial boundaries of race, culture and conservative views, and the ultimate winners are two individuals and their love for each other and commitment to live together. At the same time, we should not forget the increased divorce rate in inter-marriage and the real problems associated with such a union.

Bahrain to promote Gulf investment, industry with Egypt

BAHRAIN (R) — Bahrain is taking steps to promote industry and investment projects between oil-rich Gulf states and Egypt, the Arab World's most populous but debt-burdened nation, officials said Monday.

They said a visit to Cairo Tuesday by Sheikh Isa bin Salman Al Khalifa, the island's emir and current chairman of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC), would underscore the growing importance of Egypt's role within the region.

"We see many opportunities for industrial cooperation between Bahrain and Egypt in particular and the GCC and the Arab Cooperation Council (ACC) in general," Ahmad Qasim Fakhro, president of Bahrain's chamber of commerce, told Reuters.

The GCC states of Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates have backed Egypt's participation in an Arab summit due to begin in Casablanca May 23.

Egypt — which with Iraq, Jordan and North Yemen is a member of the newly-formed ACC — was suspended by the league for signing a peace pact with Israel in 1979.

Fakhro, who is also chairman of the Cairo-based Gulf Arab Investment Co., said Egyptian firms would hold an industrial exhibition in Bahrain in the first quarter of 1990.

At the same time, Bahrain would host a seminar on investment opportunities in Egypt aimed at encouraging Gulf businessmen to take part in joint ventures with the state, he said.

Officials say current investment in Egypt — mainly from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait — is around $1.5 billion.

Egypt, with 54 million people, is burdened with foreign debt of $43 billion and imports more than half its food.

Sheikh Isa is due to arrive in Cairo on a three-day visit following an official trip to Baghdad.

Saudi Arabia's King Fahd and Abu Dhabi Crown Prince Khalifa bin Zaid Al Nahayan have also visited Cairo as part of a GCC drive to promote relations. Oman's Sultan Qaboos is scheduled to visit next week.

Abdul Monem Shirawi, general manager of Bahrain Aluminium Extrusion Co. (Balexco), told Reuters the firm would sign a deal Thursday with the Cairo-based Arab Aluminium Co.

Balexco makes doors and window frames from aluminium ingots produced in Bahrain.

ECONOMIC NEWS BRIEFS

BBC unions plan more strikes

LONDON (R) — Staff unions at the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) have said they planned further disruption to services through lightning 24-hour strikes in support of a pay claim. BBC journalists and technicians staged a 48-hour pay strike last week, severely disrupting radio and television programmes. Most live broadcasts were cancelled. A spokesman for the unions said members would be asked to impose a work-to-rule and overtime ban and to withdraw goodwill from management to press their claim for a 16 per cent pay rise. Strikes would be called at short notice and target key events in order to make the stoppages more effective. The BBC has been hit by two strikes since last month after management refused to increase an offer of seven per cent although inflation has reached 7.9 per cent and is expected to rise further. BBC staff complain they earn considerably less than commercial television employees doing comparable jobs.

Pakistan to buy cheap Iranian oil

KARACHI (R) — Pakistan will buy 20,000 barrels of oil daily at concessional rates for one year from Iran, Pakistan's Petroleum and Natural Resources Minister Jahangir Badar has said. The official APP news agency quoted him as saying Iran would supply oil at special rates under a barter trade agreement but did not elaborate. APP did not say when the purchases would start. Pakistan produces about 50,000 barrels of oil a day, only one-third of its requirement. It imports oil mainly from Saudi Arabia.

Turks reverse debit/credit accounts

ISTANBUL (R) — In a reversal of roles, Turkish banks have started lending money to Europe in a first major buying sortie into the London bond market. Senior Istanbul bankers said three Turkish banks had brought $27 million of a $50 million, one-year Council of Europe bond issue. "It's natural to look for other investments. We have surplus liquidity due to lower imports and the current account surplus," said Tayfun Beyazit of Yapi Kredi Bank. Turkish banks have almost always been borrowers in the past but the situation changed with Turkey's unprecedented current account surplus of $1.5 billion in 1988. Due to the surplus and low domestic demand for loans, Turkey has also started arranging $500 million of trade and project credit for the Soviet Union. "As long as the surplus lasts, it's very likely we'll be major players," Beyazit said.

Reminding of financial commitments

CAEU stresses Arab Common Market

AMMAN (Petra) — A three-day meeting by the deputy representatives of Arab countries in the Council of Arab Economic Unity (CAEU) ended here Monday with a strong recommendation to Arab states to promote the Arab Common Market.

A final statement issued here at the Amman-based CAEU headquarters, said that the meeting urged Arab states to honour their financial commitment to the council so as to enable its operations to continue.

CAEU Secretary-General Hassan Ibrahim had called on Arab states to pay their contributions to the council which is finding it difficult to carry on with its activities due to a shortage of funds.

The meeting endorsed an agenda for the council's 51st meeting to open in Amman June 7 at the ministerial level and prepared a set of recommendations for the ministers' meeting.

Meanwhile, preparations have been made for Tuesday's meetings at the CAEU's headquarters of Arab experts who will discuss the application of a programme designed to promote trade between Arab states.

The programme was endorsed by the Arab member states to help develop trade among Arab countries.

'Big hands' jack up bourse in Taiwan

TAIPEI (R) — Taiwan's shadowy stock manipulators have thwarted government efforts to tax them out of Asia's second biggest share market and they are back, helping to push the booming bourse to new highs.

Share analysts said the "big hands" — a group of wealthy individuals and underground investment companies — are again at the forefront of trading, playing a game that last year gave investors here a roller coaster ride.

The manipulators' reappearance surprised many analysts, who predicted that a tax on share profits introduced Jan. 1 would drive them out of business.

"They have been acting very bluntly," said Daniel Chiang, vice-president of International Investment Trust.

Analysts said the market's resurgence is due mostly to new efforts by big players to jack prices higher.

Fooing small players

"As the market heats up the big guys are interested in keeping it going so the small players will jump in. Then, later, they can unload on them," said one foreign analyst.

The government introduced the tax on profits on annual stock sales exceeding 10 million Taiwan dollars ($389,000) to halt the waves of buying and selling inspired by manipulators.

"The tax doesn't seem to have had that effect on them at all," said Dickson Ho, senior analyst at W.I. Carr (Taiwan).

Instead, manipulators are finding new ways to run the market, sending both the index and daily turnover sky-rocketing.

Dummy accounts

To avoid the new tax levied on each individual account, big players use dummy accounts under other people's names to spread their trade around, share analysts said.

There are now more than two million registered accounts at Taiwan brokerage houses, almost double that of last September. "In the past you could trade huge amounts through a single nominee, but now you need hundreds or even thousands," said Taiwan International Investment Co. Vice-President Philip Fang. Fearful the tax would wipe out profits, the big hands pulled out of the market late last year, sending the index tumbling 35 per cent. It remained quiet, starting 1989 at 4,998.18.

During first-quarter 1989 Taiwan share prices rose by 121.8 per cent, the biggest gain in the world, official data shows.

The manipulators lure small investors into joining them by setting up underground stock investment clubs, giving them the liquidity they need to affect a wide range of stock prices.

In an effort to curb soaring daily turnover, the securities and Exchange Commission announced it would begin spot checks on brokerage houses to try to reduce the amount of illegal "wash" trading — buying and selling the same stock in one day.

Government anti-inflation measures have caused local banks to raise their interest rates, which economists hope might drain some money out of the stock market.

Share analysts predict the action will have little effect, noting Taiwan's underdeveloped bond and money markets make the bourse the only choice for investors seeking capital gains.

Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company lists 1988 achievements, '89 projects

AMMAN (Petra) — Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company (JPRC) last year produced 2,317,712 tonnes of various oil products against 2,404,523 tonnes in 1987, according to the company's annual report.

The report said that the company's sales amounted to 2,875,435 tonnes of which 111,265 tonnes were liquefied gas, 341,119 tonnes gasoline, 158,685 tonnes kerosene, 805,464 tonnes diesel oil, 1,132,877 fuel oil, and 135,079 tonnes asphalt. The report added that the gas cylinder factory last year produced 82,005 gas cylinders, each of a capacity of 12.5 kilogrammes, while the number of cylinders sold during last year was 79,258.

The factory has also maintained 42,735 cylinders and put them into use again, thus bringing the total number of cylinders in use throughout the Kingdom to 1,243,108 cylinders of a capacity of 12.5 kilograms and 9,054 cylinders of 50 kilograms capacity, as at the end of 1988.

The report pointed out that the company has set up crude oil reservoirs with a total capacity of 247,000 cubic metres, at a cost of JD 3,778,000.

The report also said that the company has prepared the basic documents for three energy-saving projects at a cost of JD 18,000 and another basic document for a sulphur extracting unit at a cost of JD 38,000. Other projects included the setting up of a new service building at Queen Alia International Airport at a cost of JD 44,500 and other miscellaneous construction at a cost of JD 49,500.

The company also spent JD 60,000 for upgrading the protection system at the refinery and the dual crude oil lines.

JPRC's 1988 refurbishments also involved purchasing computer units for use at the refinery site in Zarqa and at the company's headquarter in Amman. The company has paid JD 125,000, or 90 per cent, of the computers value during the year.

The report revealed that JPRC has completed 75 per cent of the work on the construction of two liquefied gas filling stations in Amman and Irbid at a cost of JD 5,229,000 and that it intends to install a round gas reservoir in Amman at a cost of JD 271,000. However, the project will be completed in 1989, according to the report.

The company will also complete the third housing estate project this year for the company staff at a cost of JD 1,062,000.

Free Zone Corporation reveals operation figures

AMMAN (J.T.) — Goods coming into the Aqaba free zone during last year dropped by 11,000 tonnes over the quantities arriving there in 1987, according to Free Zone Corporation Director Yassin Al Kayed.

Kayed was quoted by Sawt Al Shaab daily Monday as saying that a total of 80,000 tonnes were reexported to Arab countries, against 91,000 tonnes in the previous year of which 42,000 tonnes were reexported.

Referring to the free zone area in Zarqa, Kayed noted that it received 77,000 tonnes in the past year of which 35,000 were reexported against 56,000 tonnes received in 1987 of which 26,000 tonnes were reexported.

Commenting on the future of inter-Arab cooperation and benefits from the free zones, Kayed said that it is unfortunate that inter-Arab agreements will not improve matters and can by no means help boost industries that exist inside the free zone areas in the Kingdom.

He said this is due to the fact that the Council of Arab Economic Unity's 1966 regulations do not provide for goods in the free zone to enjoy exemptions from customs duty when entering another council member country or those of the Arab Common Market.

The operation of free zones, he added, is also hampered due to the existence of inter-Arab trade and economic agreements which provide for lists of specific goods which can be traded or those which can be exempted from duty.

Jordan, Syria review joint free zones schemes

DERAA (Petra) — The general assembly of the joint Jordanian-Syrian Free Zones Company discussed a working plan for 1989 which entails steps designed to encourage investments in the free zone area near the common Jordanian-Syrian border.

The meeting, which was co-chaired by Industry and Trade Minister Ziyad Innab and Syrian Economy and Trade Minister Mohammad Imadi also endorsed the company's 1989 fiscal budget.

Both ministers, in speeches at the meeting, underlined the importance of providing facilities for the company to help it carry out its operations and attract industries that benefit both countries.

They also called for increased cooperation between the two sides in economic and trade fields.

The general assembly meeting reviewed the company's activities, and plans for expansion and for attracting investments in industrial and agricultural areas.

U.K. soccer season draws to ugly close

LONDON (AP) — Police and lawmakers Sunday condemned a wave of fan violence on the last full league programme of the English League soccer season and said it proved more than ever that tough anti-hooliganism measures were badly needed.

Soccer authorities declined to comment on the 255 arrests police said were made in and outside stadiums in the aftermath of Saturday's action in all four divisions.

Saturday's incidents shattered a month of relative calm on British soccer pitches since April 15, when 95 Liverpool fans died, most of them after being crushed against a restraining fence at Hillsborough stadium in Sheffield.

Non-soccer officials said they showed fan violence still was rife in English soccer, and that proposed legislation to make all supporters carrying identity cards was the only answer.

"This is another example of why the Football Spectators bill is absolutely essential," said a spokesman for Britain's Environment Department, which is responsible for sports matters.

"The problem of football hooliganism is still with us, and the government is determined to act," said the spokesman, who commented on condition of anonymity.

"What happened on Saturday has brought the game back to its knees," charged David Evans, a member of parliament and chairman of English first division club, Luton Town.

Two people were seriously injured in brawls from London to Bristol in the south-west as arrests continued into the early hours of Sunday morning with the detention of 50 passengers aboard a bus chartered by Bristol Rovers' fans.

Police said the arrests were made after about 30 drunken Bristol fans had crashed a party on their way home from a game, injuring two guests and breaking two windows.

In one of the worst incidents Saturday, 24 fans were arrested on charges including drunkenness, assault and drug possession after a melee stopped the Crystal Palace-Birmingham City game. Sixteen people were treated in hospitals and two were kept overnight, one suffering from drunkenness, assault and drug possession after a melee stopped the Crystal Palace-Birmingham City game. Australian not innocent of drugs

SYDNEY (R) — Modern pentathlete Alex Watson was wrong to interpret the lifting of a life ban for a drug offence at the Seoul Olympics as meaning his national federation supported his claim he was innocent, an official said Monday. "The AOF didn't judge Alex innocent or guilty — we reduced his sentence on compassionate grounds," Coles told journalists. "He's still got to serve a two-year suspension." "What we did was to honestly sit down and look at Alex's life suspension and we realised in the circumstances it was a bit harsh," Coles said. Watson, 30, intends to appeal against his two-year international sentence at the world championships in September.

Real Madrid regains confidence

MADRID (R) — Two vintage goals by Emilio Butragueno helped Real Madrid to a confident 3-0 win at home to Seville Sunday. It was a victory which moved them a step closer to their fourth successive Spanish soccer league title. Real's closest rivals Barcelona meanwhile basked in the glory of their European Cup Winners' Cup victory, beating Celtic 3-1 at home thanks to a hat-trick by 21-year-old Guillermo Amor. Barcelona, five points behind Real but with a game in hand, could still theoretically catch Real but it looks unlikely. Real, back-lustre since their 5-0 thrashing by AC Milan in the European Cup semifinals last month, were back to something like their best.

Top riders boycott Grand Prix

MISANO ADRIATICO, Italy (AP) — Top riders Sunday boycotted the 500-CC race of the Italian motorcycle Grand Prix in a dispute over track safety after a sudden rainstorm. Before the rain and controversy Spanish riders won the 80-CC and 250-CC races on a dry track, in sunny weather, with world champions Jorge Martinez and Sito Pons holding on to their crowns. World champion Eddie Lawson and fellow-Americans Wayne Rainey, Kevin Schwantz, Randy Mamola, Freddie Spencer and Fred Merkel were among those who refused to compete in the fifth event of the 1989 world championship. Lawson, the no. 1 rider of the Japanese team Honda who initially led the boycott, claimed that the Santa Monica track in this Adriatic Sea resort was slippery and dangerous following a sudden shower, even with the use of rain tires.

Delgado virtually clinches Spanish tour

PALAZUELOS DEL ERESMA, Spain (AP) — Alberto Camargo of Colombia won the next-to-last leg of the 44th cycling tour of Spain Sunday, while Pedro Delgado of Spain virtually clinched the gruelling 22-day race. Camargo won the 21st leg, a 188-kilometre stretch from Villalba, with five peaks to climb, in 5 hours, 20 minutes and 2 seconds. He was followed by fellow Colombian Fabio Parra, in the same time as the winner, and Omar Hernandez, also of Colombia, five seconds behind. Then came a group of 11 riders, including Delgado, the winner of the 1988 Tour of France and the 1985 Vuelta, 22 seconds behind the winner, and he kept the yellow jersey which he has worn for five days. Parra, who was second in the general standings, 57 seconds behind the leader, launched a strong attack when he and Delgado started to climb the last peak of the leg. Parra, along with his countrymen, Camargo and Hernandez, managed a lead of 50 seconds, but Delgado increased his pace with a group of 10 riders and crossed the finish line only 22 seconds behind the winner.

Italian Open: Loser happy, winner unhappy with performances

Sabatini beats Sanchez for title

ROME (AP) — Top-seeded Gabriela Sabatini squandered a 6-2, 5-3 lead but regained control midway in the third set to overcome Arantxa Sanchez Sunday and capture her second straight Italian Open women's tennis title.

Sabatini needed 2 hours 40 minutes to beat the fourth-seeded Spaniard 6-2, 5-7, 6-4 on the slow red clay of the Foro Italico before a near-capacity crowd of 7,500.

Sanchez, losing to Sabatini for the seventh time in as many matches, pushed the heavily favoured Argentine to the limit in the second and third sets but failed to win the high points.

Sabatini's experience and superior all-round play made the difference in a match that included 18 service breaks in 30 games.

Sabatini, the world's third-ranked player, earned $60,000 for her third title of the year. Sanchez, playing in her first major final, won $24,000.

As she did throughout the week, Sabatini said she lacked incentive because rivals Steffi Graf, Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert skipped the Rome event.

"I only played well for moments today," said Sabatini, who turns 19 next week. "It's hard to play when no one from the top is competing. The others are all playing better because they want to beat me. They have nothing to lose when they play against me."

The 17-year-old Sanchez, whose brother Emilio lost in the 1986 Italian Open men's final, showed no disappointment.

"I played a great match today," said Sanchez, who is expected to break into the top 10 in the next world rankings. "I just need to get some more experience to win the big points. The next time I play Sabatini, I think I can beat her."

Sabatini appeared headed for an easy victory as she raced to a 4-0 lead, losing only six points. Sanchez, who had committed a series of unforced errors, dug in to win the next two games, but Sabatini held for 5-2 and broke for the set in the next game as the Spaniard chipped a backhand wide.

The second set lasted 1 hour 15 minutes as both players stayed at the baseline, trading topspin groundstrokes and taking few risks.

Sabatini broke for a 5-3 lead and went up 15-0 in the next game, just three points from winning the match.

But Sanchez ran off the next three points, whipping a forehand cross-court forehand.

With Sabatini looking tired and discouraged, the Spaniard won the next three games for the set, finishing with a backhand volley winner.

The quality of play peaked in the decisive set with both competitors hitting harder and going for winners.

The sixth game proved to be pivotal. With Sanchez serving to even the set at 3-3, she went ahead 40-15. But on the next point, she passed up what appeared to be an easy shot and drilled the ball at Sabatini at the net. Sabatini turned away, and the ball sailed long.

Sabatini broke serve for a 4-2 lead.

Sanchez had one last chance when Sabatini served her seventh and eighth double faults in the ninth game, allowing Sanchez to break and climb back to 4-5.

Finland takes gold for first time

HELSINKI (R) — In one of the most extraordinary results in the history of the European Judo Championships, Finland, who had never taken a title before, won three gold medals Sunday.

Lightweight Jorma Korhonen, Juha Salonen in the open category and women's featherweight Jaana Ronkainen thrilled the home crowd. Korhonen, who in the semifinals beat last year's champion Joaquin Ruiz of Spain with a shoulder throw, used the same technique against Hungarian Bertalan Hajtos, the 1986 champion, adding an extra knockdown to ensure his title. Salonen, regarded as the father-figure of Finnish judo, threw Frank Moller of East Germany for Waza-Ari (seven points) and then held him down for Ippon. Ronkainen, who had previously won bronzes at this level, took her title by throwing the world champion Dominique Brun of France with a footsweep counter.

Olympic growing pains

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Popularity has brought growing pains to the Olympics.

With more athletes from more countries competing in more sports than ever before, the International Olympic Committee is looking for ways to cut back. Some long-standing events could be dropped.

"We are concerned with the growth of the summer Olympic calendar," IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch said. "It is a problem that is on the table. But it is very difficult to solve."

Last September, as the biggest games began in Seoul, the IOC said it was looking for ways to pare the size. Samaranch told the committee's programme commission, which regularly reviews the sports that make up the Olympics, to get to work.

The panel held its first meeting at IOC headquarters here last month and officials say that no radical changes will be made before 1996 at the earliest. The commission would like to have its recommendations finished by late September 1990, when the '96 games are awarded.

But the actions may include a ban on demonstration sports, placing similar events such as judo and taekwondo on a rotation and replacing old, expensive sports such as modern pentathlon with newer, cheaper ones such as the triathlon.

"The problem of the size of the games has always existed," said Walter Troeger, the IOC's sports director and a programme commission member. "It has become a bigger problem recently because of increased popularity."

Troeger, Secretary General of the West German National Olympic Committee and a key figure in Olympic preparations for two decades, said the commission's goal was a blueprint for "a reasonable games."

The Seoul Olympics, for all of their success, magnified the problem of the growing games.

Because of boycotts, the Olympic field decreased from 7,894 competitors and 123 nations in Munich in 1972 to 5,923 competitors from 81 nations in Moscow in 1980.

The numbers jumped to 7,055 athletes from 140 nations in Los Angeles in 1984, as organisers tried to make up for the absence of the boycotting East bloc. And last summer, with all of the superpowers participating for the first time since Munich, 9,417 athletes from 160 nations competed in Seoul.

But where to impose limits is the problem. No one wants to give up something they already have, and the IOC is flooded with requests by non-Olympic sports to be added to the games.

Last week in Barcelona, the IOC's executive board tentatively agreed to drop rhythmic gymnastics from the '92 schedule. But it withheld a final decision until Yuri Titov, president of the International Gymnastics Federation, makes a last-ditch plea at the board's next meeting in August.

While saying it wanted to axe rhythmic gymnastics, a medal sport since 1984, the board added 20 events in seven sports, raising the number of gold medals to be awarded at the 1992 Barcelona games to 257.

Unwillingness to leave the games is one factor. Equality of the sexes also is involved.

Of the new events, 13 are women's. The board increased the size of the women's singles tennis field to 64 players, the same as the men's field, and said it might increase the number of women's teams in volleyball and handball.

"We want to treat women the same as men," Samaranch said. "This is a concern for us, but in trying to give women the same rights as men it increases the size of the games."

Multiplication of similar sports may provide an area for cuts, Troeger said. Sports could be grouped and then rotated, getting Olympic recognition every two or three games.

"With badminton and tennis, it gives us two racket sports, three if you count table tennis," Troeger said. "There is talk of adding squash and racketball. That would be five racket sports, and that would no longer be the Olympic Games. It would be the games of rackets."

At the same time, the IOC is looking at ways to trim costs, while keeping the games up to date. Troeger said the modern pentathlon-triathlon switch could fit there.

Modern pentathlon has been an Olympic sport since 1912, and its five events — shooting, swimming, fencing, horseback riding and cross-country running — carry an image of the days when the Olympics were contested among the nobility, with money and the military in their backgrounds.

It takes a lot of money to stage. All competitors must be provided with horses, and the equestrian site generally is far removed from the rest of the games. Since 1952, team medals also have been awarded, increasing the fields.

Proposals have been made to include the triathlon, a three-event sport of running, swimming and cycling, under the umbrella of the International Union of Modern Pentathlon and Biathlon. That would be the first step toward making it eligible for Olympic competition without further bloating the games.

While the summer games are crowded, the winter Olympics have plenty of room for expansion. The Olympic charter limits the winter games to sports played on snow or ice, however, and Samaranch said there were no plans to change that.

"We are happy with that definition," he said. "There should be a clear definition between the summer and winter games."

Menem scores landslide win

BUENOS AIRES (R) — Carlos Menem, the flamboyant governor of an impoverished Argentine province, won a landslide victory in Sunday's presidential elections and swept his Peronist Party back into power after 13 years.

With 93 per cent of the vote counted, official results gave Menem almost 49 per cent, a 12-point lead over Eduardo Angeloz of the ruling radical Civic Union.

Menem's lead was bigger than predicted by opinion polls and sufficient to ensure a majority in the electoral college which has the final say in choosing the successor to President Raul Alfonsín, whose six-year term ends Dec. 10.

Addressing a jubilant crowd in his stronghold of La Rioja province, Menem said: "We will put an end to this Argentina where those who do nothing live well and those who work every day of the year live badly."

Angeloz conceded defeat four and a half hours after voting ended. Later Alfonsín sent Menem a message of congratulation.

Peronist candidates won crushing victories in parallel ballots for parliamentary and provincial government positions, giving the party a majority in the lower house of congress and extending its dominance in the senate.

Despite a steady drizzle, thousands of Peronists rallied at the party's campaign headquarters in a downtown Buenos Aires hotel to celebrate the victory.

"I'm a Peronist and I adore Menem," 55-year-old Mercedes de Micchia said as busloads of people arrived beating huge drums, waving flags and singing the party anthem.

About 20 million Argentines had been due to vote in the first election for a president to be held under a democratic government in 37 years.

The country has undergone six military coups this century and has been ruled by military dictatorships for half of the past 34 years.

Pollsters predicted many ballots would be cast for the Peronists as a "punishment vote" against the radical party for its catastrophic handling of the economy.

Spiralling inflation, a soaring public sector deficit and crushing foreign debt have plunged Argentina into one of its worst crises in history.

The U.S. dollar, a traditional barometer of confidence in the economy, has rocketed 600 per cent against the local currency since January as investors cashed in savings to seek protection in hard currency.

The widespread loss of workers' purchasing power has led many political leaders, including Menem, to talk of a social explosion if the situation continued.

Menem has promised a "productive revolution" to cure the country's economic ills by granting across-the-board wage increases and easy credit to boost output and consumption.

A leading Peronist economist said that after the party takes power Dec. 10 it will seek a massive reduction in the $60-billion foreign debt.

Menem's 8,000-kilometre "convoy of hope" campaign trail attracted a fervent, religious-like following among the movement's trade union and rural poor supporters.

But many Argentines fear a Peronist government could bring a return of the economic chaos and social upheaval that typified their previous administrations.

Baltic activists seek economic independence

TALLINN (AP) — Baltic nationalists issued a call Sunday for economic independence from Moscow by next year and demanded the prosecution of Soviet officials blamed for killing or deporting thousands of their countrymen.

The assembly, from the Soviet republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, stopped short of demanding overt independence for their once-sovereign homelands.

But the more than 400 activists who gathered in the house of political education in the Estonian capital of Tallinn, called on Moscow not to "obstruct the restoration of state sovereignty," wording some said was a legal prelude to independence.

On the final day of the two-day session, the Baltic assembly said Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's drive for perestroika, or reconstruction, had failed to halt economic decline. The conference asserted the right to "choose the model of socio-economic development" Baltic people feel is necessary, apparently including capitalism.

The assembly rejected an economic plan advanced by Moscow-based officials that would give control over food and consumer products to the 15 Soviet republics. Central authority would be maintained over energy and more than half of heavy industry.

Instead, in a declaration of economic independence, the assembly called on government bodies in both Moscow and the Baltic region to give Baltic residents total control over their economies by early next year.

Legislators in Lithuania and Estonia are to go into session late this week to consider economic reform. An Estonian draft law gives the Tallinn government control over virtually all industries but defence.

In Lithuania, activists said reforms declare all resources "property of the republic," and proclaimed the right to issue a local currency.

Much of the debate over the past two days concerned the forcible absorption of the Baltic states by Josef Stalin in 1940 following a secret deal with Nazi Germany.

The assembly called on the Soviet government to renounce the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact and label Stalin's policy in the Baltics genocide.

The people's fronts called on Moscow to publish a list of officials responsible for political killings and deportations after the 1940 Soviet takeover, and to create a court to try them.

The resolution claims hundreds of thousands of Baltic residents were killed or deported after the Soviet takeover.

In a separate closed-door meeting, 61 deputies elected to a new Soviet parliament, the Congress of People's Deputies, hammered out a common platform to take to the inaugural session that begins May 25.

In four resolutions, including an appeal to all congress deputies, the Baltic lawmakers called for "radical perestroika," a term for economic restructuring, and asserted each republic's right to self-determination and choice of its own "historical path."

The appeal was designed "to rally all progressive deputies wherever they may come from in order to find a common path to solve economic, social, and ecological problems in the Soviet Union," said Estonian Popular Front leader and deputy Marju Lauristin.

Will they or won't they?

PEKING (AP) — Will they or won't they? The big question when the tightly orchestrated Soviet-Chinese summit between Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Deng Xiaoping begins Tuesday is whether the two leaders will embrace to symbolically end 30 years of strained relations. Deng, the 84-year-old paramount leader of China, bugs some foreign dignitaries and shakes hands with others. His choice of welcome is seen as a sign of his personal feeling toward the guest or their nation.

When Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze visited Deng in Shanghai last February he received a warm and lengthy handshake, but no hug. Shevardnadze referred to the Chinese leader as "comrade," but the socialist honorific was not returned. "Of course there are some reporters who pay attention to this question," said a bemused Xing Shugang, a Sovietologist at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. "They think it sets a standard." Xing said he places little importance on the high-level greeting. But for the record, he expects no embraces. A Ministry of Foreign Affairs official also weighed in with his opinion on the first encounter between Deng and Gorbachev. The Soviet leader will probably call Deng "comrade," he said, but "I do not think Deng will call him comrade in return."

H-bomb 'dissolved' harmlessly, U.S. tells Japan

TOKYO (AP) — A U.S. hydrogen bomb was crushed by sea pressure when it fell into the Pacific Ocean 24 years ago and its nuclear material has dissolved harmlessly on the sea floor, the United States has told Japan.

The material poses no environmental hazard, the U.S. Defence Department said in a report given to the Japanese embassy in Washington last Friday.

The Foreign Ministry gave a copy of the four-paragraph report to the Associated Press Monday after cabinet members said Japan would check for possible environmental dangers. Japan is the only country ever attacked with nuclear weapons.

Since the 1965 accident was disclosed last week, several protest demonstrations have been held and opposition members of parliament have pressed the government to get a full explanation from Washington.

Japan also was still asking whether the aircraft carrier Ticonderoga had been sailing to a Japanese port when one of its A-4 Skyhawks accidentally fell into the sea while carrying a bomb with an explosive force of a million tons of TNT.

This country bans nuclear weapons from its territory but is thought to look the other way in the case of port calls by American vessels likely to be carrying nuclear bombs. The U.S. navy does not comment on whether ships carry nuclear weapons.

Japan asked the United States for an explanation last week after details of the 1965 accident were disclosed in Washington by William Arkin, a researcher for the Institute of Policy Studies.

Arkin said the B-43 one-megaton bomb was not in danger of exploding, but its 15 kilogrammes of plutonium could threaten the environment as the structure of the bomb deteriorated.

The U.S. Defence Department report said the bomb was not built to withstand the tremendous pressure of the 5,000-metre depths in which it sank, and its nuclear materials had leaked into the sea.

The high explosives that would trigger a nuclear or high explosive detonation can ever occur in the environment now or in the future," it said.

Nuclear weapons specialists at the U.S. National Laboratory had tested the unspecified type of nuclear material by dissolving it in sea water, the report said.

"These tests show that the material will dissolve in a relatively short time. Because of its high density, the solute would have settled very quickly to the floor of the ocean along with other sedimentation. Therefore, there is no environmental impact," it said.

Foreign Minister Sosuke Uno, responding in parliament to opposition questions on the incident, said Japan accepted the American report saying there was no environmental danger.

On Saturday, about 500 people demonstrated in Tokyo calling for the elimination of nuclear arms and for an end to the U.S.-Japan security treaty, under which some 60,000 U.S. troops are based in Japan.

The treaty calls for consultations between the two countries if nuclear weapons are introduced into Japan.

Tamils kill 10 Indian soldiers

COLOMBO (AP) — Tamil guerrillas detonated a remote-controlled bomb, killing 10 Indian peacekeeping soldiers in the northern Jaffna peninsula, Sri Lankan military officials said Monday.

One Tamil guerrilla was killed and two were wounded when other Indians returned fire after the Sunday night attack, according to the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Meanwhile, a statement issued in the name of a Sinhalese extremist group denied last week's reports that its leader was ill and seeking government permission to go abroad for treatment.

Tamil civilians in Vavuniya quoted travellers from the Jaffna peninsula as saying the Tamil Tiger guerrillas set off a bomb when the Indian soldiers' truck reached Mirusuvil, east of Jaffna town.

The Vavuniya residents, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the dead guerrilla was a local leader of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam.

They said three civilians also were killed when their bus was caught in the cross fire. But the Sri Lankan military officials said they were not aware of any civilian deaths.

A spokeswoman for the Indian high commission said she had no word on the attacks.

Jaffna is 300 kilometres north of Colombo, the capital.

On Saturday, at least 12 Indian soldiers and 18 Tamil rebels were killed near Nedunkernie in the Mullaitivu district, about 75 kilometres southeast of Mirusuvil, the Indian high commission (embassy) spokeswoman said.

Vavuniya residents had reported Saturday that at least 10 Indians were killed in that attack.

Tamil guerrillas have been fighting a guerrilla war and massacring Sinhalese civilians since 1983 in their campaign for a separate homeland in northern and eastern Sri Lanka. The Tigers, the largest of the guerrilla groups, opened peace talks this month with the Sinhalese-dominated government, and attacks against civilians have tapered off.

The Indian peacekeepers were sent to Sri Lanka in July 1987 to enforce a peace accord and disarm the Tigers. The Tigers, after initially accepting the accord, rejected and started attacking the Indians.

Noboru Takeshita

Takeshita might stay on

TOKYO (R) — Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita may stay in office if his ruling party cannot find a suitable successor, analysts and an official said Monday.

Takeshita said April 25 he would step down as a result of his links to the Recruit shares-for-favours scandal after the budget is passed by parliament by the end of this month.

But government officials told Reuters Monday they had made contingency plans for him to attend the July 14-16 Paris summit of industrialised nations.

"Takeshita could drag on until after the summit," said a senior official involved in making the summit arrangements. "He could go back on his decision to quit."

Masayoshi Ito, a prime candidate for Takeshita's job and the only member of the ruling party's leadership untouched by the scandal, turned down the job last week and threw the succession process into turmoil.

"I have said that after the budget is passed, the entire cabinet will resign," the premier replied.

Professor Rei Sbratori of Tokai University said he believed the succession question would prove so difficult that Takeshita would hang on until his term ends Oct. 30.

"The biggest possibility is that Takeshita will continue until Oct. 30 because nobody else can be found to succeed him before then," Shiratori said.

Speculation grew Monday that prosecutors were close to arresting the first members of parliament in connection with the scandal, in which the Recruit Publishing and Telecommunications Group gave huge sums to key politicians and officials.

The Japanese media widely reported a senior member of the ruling party and a member of the opposition Komeito Party were likely to be arrested soon.

Crusader wins Leningrad seat

MOSCOW (R) — Special investigator Nikolai Ivanov, who said Politburo member Yegor Ligachev figured in an organised crime investigation, has won a seat in the new Soviet parliament, officials said Monday.

Running against 27 other candidates, Ivanov took 60 per cent of the vote in the contest for the city-wide Leningrad seat according to preliminary results obtained by Reuters from the regional Communist Party headquarters.

"This is a repeat of the Boris Yeltsin phenomena," said Leningrad party spokesman Vladimir Kiryanov, referring to the fallen Kremlin radical who won in Moscow in March despite, and perhaps because of, his struggles with the party.

Kiryanov, contacted by telephone from Moscow, said he thought Leningrad voters had been angered by an attack on Ivanov published in Pravda Saturday, a day after the investigator implicated Ligachev and three former top officials during a televised debate.

Ivanov told television viewers that Ligachev's name, as well as those of former Politburo members Grigori Romanov and Mikhail Solomentsev and former Supreme Court Chief Judge Vladimir Terebilov had figured in a corruption investigation.

He gave no details and stressed that he was not pronouncing anyone guilty but added he was worried that a recent shift to the right in Kremlin policy reflected a strengthening of Ligachev's position in the Kremlin.

"Not only Ivanov's statements played a role, but what was published in Pravda the next day," Kiryanov said.

The article in the Communist Party newspaper said a special state commission was probing Ivanov's methods and those of his boss at the prosecutor's office, Telman Gdlyan.

It revealed a fierce struggle between the Kremlin and the special investigators whose work recently led to the conviction for bribery of Yuri Churbanov, son-in-law of former Kremlin chief Leonid Brezhnev.

Workers at Ivanov's campaign headquarters in Leningrad said the 37-year-old special investigator had won because his platform stressed the fight against organised crime.

"Everyone is fed up with the mafia," Yuri Sturick, spokesman for Ivanov, said.

Sunday's voting took place in 198 districts where only one or two candidates contested the first round of voting March 26 for the new Congress of People's Deputies but none obtained the required 50 per cent of ballots.

Greens repaint Australia politics

SYDNEY (AP) — Political leaders Monday acknowledged a groundswell of support for the Greens in Australia after a state election in Tasmania gave conservationists real power for the first time.

Prime Minister Bob Hawke and federal opposition Liberal Party leader Andrew Peacock conceded that environmental issues are now of major concern to voters after independent Greens grabbed the balance of power in the so-called Apple Isle Saturday.

Incumbent Premier Robin Gray's Liberal Party looked set to take 17 seats in the 35-seat House of Assembly, one short of an absolute majority, raising the prospect of it ruling in coalition with the Greens, who won five seats.

Labour, which as policy refuses power-sharing, won 13 seats.

Newspaper editorials said the result changed Australia's political landscape and sent a message to federal and state governments that the conservation movement is a force to be reckoned with.

Final results will not be known until May 29, but Gray conceded that Tasmania's 300,000 voters had reacted angrily to a proposed 1-billion-dollar Canadian paper mill in the environmentally sensitive area of Wesley Vale.

The mill, which would have been Australia's biggest foreign investment, was scrapped earlier this year after conservationist raised concerns about logging, toxic waste and damage to the relatively unspoiled environment.

Sparsely populated Tasmania, Australia's southernmost state, has a long history of environmental battles. Earlier this decade one of the battles was over the building of a dam on the Franklin River. Conservationists fought the dam because it would have destroyed large areas of dwindling rain forest.

The conservationist profile is also high in Sydney, where beach pollution has become a major issue. In Queensland, Australia's northern sub-tropical state, there is major concern about destruction of rain forests.

"The conservation movement, its aims, aspirations and its members, are to be taken seriously," said Brisbane's Courier-Mail newspaper. "All governments now will ignore conservation issues at their peril."

The nationally circulated Australian newspaper said: "It would be folly to underestimate the extent of the success." It noted that the lower house in Tasmania would be the first outside West German parliaments in Hesse and West Berlin in which environment-hesed Greens hold the balance of power.

Gray, the incumbent premier, said: "Clearly there is very great concern about the environment." Hawke commented: "Clearly, the environment matters."

Peacock, the federal opposition leader noted: "There is a message from Tasmania about concern for the environment."

Hawke, however, rejected any possibility of Labour teaming with the Greens to form a coalition state government in Tasmania.

That leaves the Liberal Party with the option of being sworn in but risking defeat on a vote of no-confidence, or sharing power with the Greens. Independent Greens leader Bob Brown said he would "keep the door open."

Hawke reacted to the result Monday by promising to announce a major environmental policy statement in June or July on initiatives on global issues such as the greenhouse effect and the depletion of the ozone layer.

Bonn lonely-hearts spy jailed

DUESSELDORF (R) — A former Bonn government secretary who stole secrets for a KGB agent she met through a newspaper "lonely hearts" column was jailed for six-and-a-half years Thursday. Elke Falk, 44, had admitted passing government documents to the agent, whom she knew as Gerhard Thieme, between 1975 and 1985. Falk, who worked in various government ministries including the office of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, admitted her activities caused serious damage to the West German government. She picked Thieme from 30 replies she received to her advertisement for a marriage partner in 1973. He told her the following year he was a secret agent from East Germany and persuaded her to spy for him. During a holiday with Thieme in East Germany in 1974 she became pregnant, but had an abortion in East Berlin after Thieme's superiors told her she could risk her job — then in the chancellery — if she had the child.

Shattered chateau is an expensive smash

NEW YORK (R) — Bill Sokolin doesn't usually cry over spilt milk, but this was a 202-year-old wine worth more than $500,000 dripping onto the carpet from the shattered bottle in his hand. "It was a disaster. Thank God it was broken by me and not anyone else," Sokolin said of his crash into a tray at a New York wine-tasting that broke his Chateau Margaux 1978. Sokolin, a wine merchant who was showing the rare bottle to wine connoisseurs, watched in horror as the red wine, once owned by the third U.S. President Thomas Jefferson, ran down his leg and onto the floor. "I thought someone had spilled coffee," he said, before he realised the bottle worth $519,000 had two holes in it. "I was in shock all day yesterday," Sokolin told Reuters last week. Sokolin said he didn't even own the rare bottle, but had obtained it on consignment from the British wine firm of Whitmans. Fortunately it was insured, he said.

Sex makes 'Dear Marta' Switzerland's most popular columnist

By Michael Shields
Reuter

ZURICH — The most popular newspaper column in Switzerland — land of Calvin, caution and calculation — thrives on the frank discussion of sexual topics.

The "Dear Marta" column is not bound by the restraint found in much of the Swiss press, as some recent themes illustrate.

A 23-year-old man writes that he has never had the courage to kiss a woman.

Another man says he feels tortured that his dependence on pornography for sexual arousal will force him to leave his girlfriend.

These are the sort of issues which make "Dear Marta" special in conservative, staid Switzerland.

The woman behind the column is Marta Emmenegger, who began it almost 10 years ago when the editor of the tabloid "Blick" asked her to help put more "heart, pain and sex," onto its pages, she told Reuters in a recent interview.

Her recipe was simple.

"There had always been advice columns in the newspapers," Emmenegger said, "but none expressly discussed sexuality. No one wanted to handle that hot potato."

So Marta, now 66, decided to do so.

"We had a week in which I introduced myself to readers as a person," she recalled. "I said that I was divorced, the mother of three grown children, what my hobbies are, what I think about men, and so on. And when the week was over I found 68 letters on my desk on Monday morning."

"People saw I was flesh and blood and have problems like anyone else."

Thousands of requests for advice and yearnings for guidance through moral quandaries reach her desk every year.

Gentle proddings

Emmenegger's responses all use unadorned facts about human sexuality and gentle proddings to change destructive behaviour. Her aim, she said, is to foster a positive self-image in the people who write.

Those letters represent calls for help from the silent majority of Swiss, who she said tend to be sexually repressed. They turn to her because she is neutral, far removed, ensures anonymity and does not cost anything, traits dear to the Swiss.

The column also attracts its share of bawdy mail, some from religious fanatics.

Not all her columns deal with sexual themes — as a letter from a man wondering whether injections of female hormones can help keep him from going bald attests — but most do.

"Today I am the sexual adviser of the country, although of course I do not write solely about sex or give only sexual advice. But it turned out that way because if couples have problems, it often has to do with sexuality."

Her straightforward style has made her a regular on television talk programmes and landed her a popular radio show. It also got her column dumped from a West German newspaper for being too progressive.

More interesting than politics

"There is no doubt she is the most read columnist in Switzerland," said Hanspeter Peyer, Blick's managing editor. "Sex and love put together are more interesting than politics."

Emmenegger said she often consults sexual therapist and psychologists about the advice she passes on. Trained as a secretary, she married early and had three children. Her journalist husband introduced her to the field that would win her fame.

She was born the third of 11 children to a conservative Catholic working class family that had neither the money nor the inclination to foster her love of the fine arts.

"The poverty did not bother me. What bothered me was the lack of freedom to develop your own personality."
